TWO MEN DEAD AND ONE DYING AS A RESULT OF OIL TANK BLAST

C. Eirich and Anton Schieber Succumb To Burns and Injuries They Received In Spectacular Explosion At Oil Plant In Iwilei

ONE VICTIM IS HURLED IN AIR A FLAMING TORCH

Ralph B. Harrub Catapulted 25 Feet Over Fence Surrounding Buildings and Hope For His Recovery Has Been Abandoned

Two men are dead and one is dying as a result of the explosion at the Standard Oil Company's tanks, Iwilei, at ten-fifty-five o'clock yesterday morning.

The three victims were all hurled into the air by the force of the blast and one was thrown twenty-five feet away over the fence surrounding the plant. The latter's clothes were ignited and his body went through the air a twisting torch that resembled a giant skyrocket, according to the stories told the police by witnesses.

List of Casualties

The dead:

C. EIRICH, Seaside Hotel; Standard Oil Construction superintendent; body burned from head to waist; died at eight-thirty o'clock last night. Leaves a widow.

ANTON SCHIEBER, 3 Oahu place; Standard Oil foreman; left leg fractured in three places, left shoulder broken and forehead cut; died at eleven-thirty o'clock last night.

The dying:

RALPH B. HARRUB, 1839 Makiki street; employe of the Hawaiian Electric Company; body burned from head to feet; he is the victim who was catapulted, a torch, twenty-five feet away. Early this morning, Dr. George F. Straub, who is attending him at Queen's Hospital, said he could live only a few hours.

Electricity Probably Cause

There was much speculation as to the cause of the explosion but nobody was inclined to definitely assign it. The best guess, however, was that an electric current furnished the spark that touched off the distillate.

The three men were working on the top of a tank of distillate. Presumably, from reports to the police, they had electric wires there. It appears, however, that the explosion was not without warning to the men, for Schieber was not burned, except possibly on the left hand, and he probably had time to jump from the tank. His injuries were internal and bone fractures.

A fire foam apparatus was being installed under the direction of Mr. Eirich. It had been put in to the point where it checked the fire. Without it, seven tanks in the one enclosure hardly could have escaped.

A. S. Prescott, district sales manager of the Standard Oil Company, was away when the explosion occurred. He was caught by telephone, and he returned to the yard.

He admitted frankly that he did not know what caused the explosion; "But," said he, "we have nothing to conceal. We wish to know the cause as much as anyone could. When the injured men are in condition to talk, we will investigate fully."

Fire Apparatus Saves Tank

Fireman and police answered the fire alarm. Chief Thurston was in charge of the firemen. He said yesterday afternoon that no flame was appearing from the tank when he arrived. His men climbed to the tank and used chemicals on the surface of the distillate. The fire-foam apparatus of the Standard Oil Company saved the tanks, in his opinion.

Running from the patrol wagon, Waterfront Policeman Carter found the tank smoking badly, apparently from beneath the big lid.

"What is in this tank?" he asked of a boy standing near.

"Distillate!" came the reply, and Carter hurried about the tank.

He found Schieber lying on his back between the tanks, unable to move, and crying out for help. An old door, lying nearby, served as a stretcher for him. Carter and Melville Harris, employed by the Standard Oil Company's office carried him away.

Eirich was lying only a few feet away. Carter and Harris hurried back, despite the smoking tank, and took Eirich on a sheet of corragated iron, and hurried him away.

Thrown By Explosion

"I certainly hated to go near that tank," said Carter, "but I had to do it to get the men out."

In the meantime, the other policemen had spread over the ground to search for other injured men. Policemen Sam Ferrera and W. R. Chilton found Harrub, lying twenty-five feet from the tank. He had been cast by the explosion clear outside the fence of the grounds. He was laid on the stretcher and put in the patrol wagon. When the stretcher was in the wagon, taking all the floor, Schieber, on the floor, could not be put inside.

"Put him in and I'll get down here," Harrub said, and he crouched down on the stretcher, gritting his teeth during the rush to the Queen's Hospital.

"That man was game!" said the policeman.

"Such a condition as this demonstrates, more clearly than any accident recently, how much we need an ambulance for police emergency work," said Dr. R. G. Ayer of the emergency hospital. The same opinion was repeated by the policemen, who saw severely injured men suffering from lack of proper attention. Three policemen also had to be left at the hospital to assist the hospital attendants in relieving the men.

Harrub Is Tortured

During the trip to the hospital, Harrub kept moaning, "Turn off the juice; turn off the juice!" Presumably he referred to electric current.

First examination of the injured by Doctor Ayer showed that Harrub's entire body was burned superficially, that is, the epidermis from his head to his feet had been blistered.

"While this is not so severe, in the gravity of the burns themselves, as burns beyond the epidermis, it is very grave because of the extent of the injury," said the doctor. "I consider that he is in a dangerous condition."

Leg And Shoulder Fractured

Doctor Ayer found that Schieber's left leg was fractured in three places, at the hip, a short distance below the knee and at the ankle, and that his left shoulder was fractured. Evidently, he had fallen on his left side when he toppled from the tank. There were no burns whatever. There was a wound in his brow above the left eye, which crimsoned his face. There did not appear to be any internal injuries.

He told Doctor Ayer that he thought he had jumped, but that he could not recall distinctly just what he had done. Evidently, he had had a few seconds warning, enough to drop from the tank to the ground before the explosion hurled the other men into the air.

Eirich was burned superficially from the waist up. His trousers had protected his body from the waist down. The burns covered the arms and shoulders as well as the torso. His eyes were not injured. His hair was burned down almost to the scalp.

"His chances for recovery are about even, I should say," Doctor Ayer said, on returning to the police station. More than half of his body is burned. Two-thirds of the skin is a mortal injury. Grafting probably will not be necessary. I observed no evidence of internal injuries during the brief time I had to examine him."

Harrub was utterly naked when picked up. His clothing had been burned from his body or torn off by men who were putting out the burning cloth. His shoes had been removed. Ends of the sleeves of his shirt alone remained. Motorcycle Policeman Sizemore, searching the rags of clothing afterward, found his watch, still running, and $2.25 cents in silver. The coins were smoked by the fire that burned the clothing. His shoes and belt were lying nearby. His pockets were full of sand, evidently filled when he slid on the ground after striking, and his face was scratched and covered with sand where he had struck.

Here to Install Apparatus

Both Harrub and Eirich had masks put on their faces to protect them during the trip to the hospital.

"Mr. Eirich has been here since late in June," said Mr. Prescott. "He is with the construction department of the company, resides in Oakland and has headquarters at San Francisco. Mrs. Eirich is at the Seattle hotel, where they had been living. He was expected to go to Seattle from here to install similar apparatus.

"His work was installing the fire-foam system. A high tower has two tanks, one containing an acid, the other a mixture of water and glue. These tanks have pipes leading to the oil tanks. When the temperature inside reaches a certain temperature, a fire plug melts, and the mixture is sprayed over the liquid within. Evidently, installation had progressed to a point where the apparatus could check the fire.

"I do not know any details whatever of the work the men were doing, or what caused the explosion. The reason is that Mr. Eirich was in complete charge of the work, and would have finished installing the system before reporting to us. Then he would have turned it over, explaining its operation in full at that time.

Published Statements Resented

"Inasmuch as Mr. Harrub, who is employed by the Hawaiian Electric Company, had been working with Mr. Eirich, I presume that electric wiring was used in some manner in the system, but I do not know this."

Mr. Prescott deeply resented published statements yesterday afternoon that it was reported the men were using a gasoline torch on the tank.

"That is silly," he said. "We never allow flame there." Then he detailed the precautions taken even as to electric wires in the offices of the company, situated near the tanks.

Mr. Prescott was told by Dr. George F. Straub, who attended the men at the Queen's Hospital, that Mr. Harrub had an even chance of life and that Mr. Eirich's chance was better.

The tanks are surrounded by a fire wall, which would have prevented spread of the flame even if the tanks had gone. There are four tanks of fuel oil, one of gasoline, one of kerosene and one of distillate. The distillate tank was not full, but it had several thousand gallons in it.

No Light on Accident

The damage to the tank is little. The top and the upper portion of the sides are blackened by smoke, and rivets are torn where the top bulged up under the force of the explosion; but even this is not extensive. There was only one manhole, Mr. Prescott said, and it is in the top.

T. W. De Frees of the Standard Oil Company was on the grounds when the explosion occurred. He aided in getting the injured men to the automobiles. He could give no light on the cause.

The tank is thirty-five feet high and sixty-five feet in diameter. The tank in which the fire-foam is contained is fifty feet high, which gives a flow from it into the others.

Fire apparatus sent to the scene was Engine Company No. 1 and No. 4, which included a fire engine and a motor combination hose and chemical wagon in each company, and a chemical truck.

ROAD SUPERVISOR WRECKS CITY AUTO IN DEMONIAC RIDE

With Two Companions Charley Clark Burns Air In Wild Junket

ONE FRIEND ABANDONS MACHINE TO SAVE LIFE

Then Official Plunges into Gravel Bank and Telescopes Public Buzzwagon

Charley Clark, road supervisor, undertook on Sunday to give the roads of Oahu one thorough good test, both for speed and endurance. The first consideration was given to speed, according to the wild reports that have come in from the wake of the flying auto. The road supervisor loaded up his machine, paid for by the taxpayers, with gasoline for which the taxpayers likewise footed the bill. He took one look around, threw spark, gas and gears into the high and made the pali in two jumps.

From that time on, until the machine attempted to take a short cut through a gravel hill at Kaneohe, the inspection trip was one grand blur of flying scenery, Japanese laborers turning backsomersaults to clear the way, dead chickens that had committed suicide by deciding to cross the road and showers of asphalt macadam, spurned into the flying wake of the C. & C. buzzwagon.

Vieira Preferred Walking

When Clark hurtled up Nuuanu Valley, he was not recognized as an official of the municipality and there were hurried telephone messages to the deputy sheriffs and others on the windward side to clear the way for a through passenger and to get the names and addresses of witnesses to what ever killing might result. The car hesitate some, going around the hairpin curve, and Henry Vieira, one of two passengers with Clark, decided that it would be best to risk a broken leg by jumping than to finish out the ride. Vieira walked back to town.

When Clark discovered that the road was too far around and decided to take a short cut through the gravel bank, he miscalculated the affair a bit. The machine telescoped and the people of Kaneohe are wondering yet what brand of awa root Charley carried that enabled him to crawl safely out of the stewed machine and drag his remaining companion with him in one piece.

The matter has been brought to the attention of the grand jury, the members of which want to know just what the city attorney is going to do about it. The investigators suggest that Clark be prosecuted for reckless and heedless driving, and for malicious injury to the gravel bank, while it is likewise suggested that he be sued on behalf of the taxpayers for the value of the wrecked car. Just what the city attorney may think remains to be seen.

Judge Ashford Instructs Jury

Without mentioning Clark or any one else in connection with the wrecked county machine, Judge Ashford yesterday made a little talk to the grand jury, both before and after the jury met, calling the attention of the jurors to joyriding by government officials in government machines.

"I saw the automobile resting in the ditch yesterday," said the judge. "It was propped up with boxes. The front axle, radiator and many other parts of the mechanism had been removed. I visited the place today and the remains of the machine had disappeared.

"The repair bills for government machines, I have heard, are stupendous. I understand that it cost about $1400 a quarter to keep former Mayor Fern's car in repairs," he continued. "Gentlemen, you are the grand inquest of the county and in reference to such propositions as this you are aptly called into action.

William Henry Knows Witnesses

"Although I know the names of these men," Judge Ashford said, referring to the "bunch" that had been out riding in the gasoline burner on Sunday, "I will not mention them at this time. This is for the reason that it might prove embrassing to these persons should the testimony of the alleged witnesses prove groundless."

After the grand jury returned from its session to the court room Judge Ashford told the jurors that one of them, former High Sheriff William Henry, could give them the names of the witnesses in the case of the wrecked automobile.

The grand jury made no report in the matter yesterday, but it is understood that it will take up the case seriously at its next session, which will be held at two o'clock next Thursday afternoon.

UKULELE CRAZE TO HELP HAWAII

Promotion Committee Will Ask Makers of Instruments To Adopt Uniform Label

The ukulele craze on the mainland is to be turned to the advantage of the Hawaiian Islands.

It is realized by officials of the Hawaii Promotion Committee that, like the pineapple, the ukulele may be turned into a national advertisement.

Accordingly, it is the intention of A. P. Taylor, acting director of the committee, to propose at the next meeting of that body the adoption of a uniform "Made in Honolulu, U. S. A." label, which would be placed on all Hawaiian instruments.

One thing that has urged Mr. Taylor on in this regard is news from the mainland that ukuleles are being manufactured there in large quantities and being sold as Hawaiian instruments. This is being done, it is reported, in the interest of larger profits. It is resented by the makers and dealers of Hawaii because, they say, the instruments are much inferior to the genuine ones.

Some of the local makers and dealers already are using labels of their own, but it was said yesterday that they would fall in with the new plan of the promotion committee. In view of the fact that the labels would be inexpensive, and probably supplied gratis by the committee, it is believed all will fall in with the scheme.

It was said at the Bergstrom music store yesterday that a big increase in the demand for ukuleles had been noted since the exposition at San Francisco opened, and that the orders continue to swell. As a result the maker who fills the Bergstrom orders has doubled his force to eight men. W. D. Adams recently made a tour of the mainland and made arrangements with large music houses filling the increased demand.

A. R. Cunha, composer of a number of popular Hawaiian songs which are played on ukuleles, says one result of the mainland fad has been a big increase in the sale of his songs. One new Broadway musical comedy is seeking rights to several of his numbers for special features of its program.

Phonographs have helped create an interest in Hawaiian music Mr. Cunha believes, Hawaiian music, he predicts, will create a place for itself on the mainland.

GRAND JURY FILES THREE TRUE BILLS

P. W. Phillips, K. Kimura and Thomas Hicks were indicted by the territorial grand jury at its session yesterday. They will appear before Judge Ashford at nine o'clock this morning for arraignment. The indictments are as follows:

P. W. Phillips, charged with failing to render assistance to a person injured by an automobile. On August 5 Phillips, while driving an auto, ran over and injured Isaac P. Dentzler. He drove on and left the man lying in the road. When the police attempted to arrest Phillips, who is a submarine sailor, he sought refuge aboard one of the submarines in the harbor. It required a special order from the navy department at Washington to have Phillips delivered to the local police.

Thomas Hicks is charged with assault with intent to commit murder. It is alleged that on August 17 Hicks attacked and stabbed a Japanese, Yoshimaru, with a knife. The police have the knife.

K. Kimura is charged with assault and battery with a deadly weapon. The indictment says that he used a knife on S. Abe on August 5.

No bill was found by the grand jury in the case of the Territory against Ahn Yuen Young, Ko Suk Joe, Kim Kyung Woon and Sing Young Whar who had been charged with unlawful assembly. This was the case which arose following the row in the official circles of the Korean National Association. An embezzlement charge against some Koreans, also connected with the association and this particular internal row, is still awaiting the action of the grand jury.

The jury will meet again at two o'clock next Thursday afternoon.

COAST CHINESE ASK SHIP SUBSIDY

(Special by Marconi Wireless to Hawaii Shimpo)

SAN FRANCISCO, August 26.—The Chinese chamber of commerce here yesterday passed resolutions urging the subsidizing by the Chinese government of the proposed Chinese steamship line for the Transpacific service.

The Kyoto cherry blossom dancers, who have been held at Angel Island for the past several weeks, will be allowed to land tomorrow, the Japanese fair commissioners having given a bond that they will leave the country at the conclusion of their services at the fair.

Another annoying difference between the exhibitors at the Japanese pavilion and the federal authorities was satisfactorily settled yesterday when the representative of Mikimoto, the famous dealer in artificial pearls, paid a custom duty of ten dollars on pearls he was accused of having smuggled into the country and had his pearls returned to him.
