HAD NOTHING TO LIVE FOR

George D. Morris, Writes a Letter and a Year Later Dead in His Bed Saturday Even-

PROBABLY TOOK POISON

We Better Was Found in the Room, But Not Enough Evidence That He Took His Own Life.

George D. Morris, of No. 1221 Blondeau street, died in his bed Saturday night shortly after 8 o'clock, supposed to have taken some poison. He had been acting strangely for a few days.

No information could be ascertained as to what he took, nor where he got it. No bottle or package was to be found in his room to anything to prove that he had committed suicide, the police, the only witness. An autopsy would probably reveal the matter, but there is no need to resort to such.

Morris lived with his aged mother and brother-in-law, D. H. Fine, and family at the family residence, 1221 Blondeau street.

Shortly after ten his mother heard him write to the man and wife, Mr. Fine, asking him to go to see the boy, to the Nave wedding, was serving. She did not go, but the room herself.

Fine was up stairs and from Morris' room she heard the door close. He hadn't his hat on and went out with warm water and had to Boston ammonia.

Morris called on "Good-bye Mother" from his bed and his mother heard him. In the short afternoon and when the doctor arrived the man was dead.

When the doctor arrived, a mouth more, was made but no sign of bottle or package could be found and the doctor was unable to state the cause of death whether it was morphine, strychnine or what.

The following was left in the room, written with a lead pencil upon the bath of his stroller:

"No Letter.

"Dorothy House."

The coroner announced that no inquest would be held.
