The Shenandoah Valley, the "Valley of Dispute," "Sheridan's Ride."

The beautiful Valley of the Shenandoah—known in the army as the "Valley of Dispute"—suffered more than any one section of country. A branch of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad extends southward through it from Harper's Ferry to Strasburg and from Harrisburg to Lexington, with the Southern Railway forming the connecting link. The Blue Ridge on the east and the Shenandoah Mountains on the west, echoed with the roll of artillery and the crack of musketry almost continually during '63, '64 and '65.

Halltown, Charlestown, Summit Point, Winchester, Opequon, Kernstown, Middletown, Cedar Creek, Strasburg, Fisher's Hill, Woodstock, Mt. Jackson, New Market, Harrisonburg, Cross Keys, Staunton and Lexington, following each other consecutively down the road, were battle-stained over and over.

Winchester suffered the most. Cedar Creek was perhaps the fiercest, where Sheridan became immortalized in history for his famous ride from Winchester.
