JAPAN USED NO FORCE ON KOREA

Diplomatic Adviser of Korea Says Treaty Was Agreed To at Friendly Council.

Washington, Dec. 29.—In a private letter to a friend in this city Durham White Stevens, diplomatic adviser to the Korean government, comments as follows upon recent reports that the treaty establishing a Japanese protectorate was extorted by force:

"In Seoul," he says, "we learn that curiously distorted accounts of the occurrences of the night of Nov. 17 have been telegraphed to America and Europe. One in particular, to the Berlin Lokal Anzeiger, is especially mendacious.

"It speaks of the 'tragedy of Seoul' of which reports have come from 'well-informed quarters,' and asserts that Marquis Ito, together with Minister Hayashi and General Hasegawa, accompanied by a large contingent of Japanese troops, forced the emperor to sign the new treaty which they had already prepared and brought with them; that the Korean ministers fled from the palace in order not to affix the seal of state to a document which robbed their country of independence; that Japanese soldiers were sent after them, and that they were forcibly brought back and ordered to affix their seals. The account closes with the statement that 'this violent act had led to tumults among the people.'

Great Seal Not Stolen.

"Another dispatch, to the China Gazette, Shanghai, states hat Mr. Namano, accompanied by a file of soldiers, went to the residence of the minister of foreign affairs and forcibly brought the seal of the foreign office to the palace where the Japanese minister himself used it to seal the treaty.

"Possibly other canards, equally silly, have gained circulation at home, and therefore, knowing your interest in eastern matters, I feel sure you would like to know the facts.

"Marquis Ito came to Korea with an autograph letter from the emperor of Japan to the emperor of Korea. This letter expressed an earnest hope for a closer union between the two countries. Its tone and purport were well calculated to demonstrate Japan's friendly intentions and to soothe Korean susceptibilities. The choice of an envoy, moreover, was decidedly happy, as Marquis Ito is especially persona grata to the emperor of Korea.

"He came here on a somewhat similar mission at the beginning of the war, and several times since, to my personal knowledge, has been urgently requested by the emperor to repeat the visit. His reputation for fair dealings and the considerate regard for Korean rights, as well as for Korean susceptibilities, have earned him a high place in the emperor's estimation.

Korean Emperor Agrees.

"On this occasion he presented the autograph letter at a formal audience and several days later had a private audience of over four hours' duration. He explained the situation and Japan's wishes fully to the emperor, and the latter agreed in principle to the propositions which the marquis stated would be formally submitted later on by the Japanese minister. The emperor stated that the decision regarding the details of the new arrangement would be left to his cabinet and gave orders that the latter should consult with the Japanese minister.

"Conferences then ensued between the cabinet and Mr. Hayashi, the last one by mutual agreement and in accordance with the prearragned plan, and there were no soldiers present except Korean soldiers forming the palace guard. The Japanese minister, with his secretaries and interpreters, attended and there was a full and frank discussion of all the details of the proposed treaty.

"Ultimately, Marquis Ito was asked to attend, and he came, accompanied by General Hasegawa, but unattended by any soldiers save the small bodyguard of half a dozen gendarmes who go about with him everywhere in Seoul. The discussion then proceeded for several hours; amendments were propsed by the Korean cabinet and accepted, and finally the amended form was agreed to by a majority of six out of eight members of the cabinet. Thereupon the treaty was signed and sealed by the minister of foreign affairs, in conformity with the direct order of the emperor.

"During all these proceedings there was no show of force and no unseemly exhibition of any kind whatever. The emperor was not personally present during the conference, but, as is the custom, remained in his private rooms, whence he communicated his wishes thru the minister of the household or by one or another of the ministers summoned to his presence from time to time.

"Perhaps the fact that at Marquis Ito's farewell audience this afternoon the emperor earnestly requested him to defer his departure, which the marquis has consented to do, somewhat against his own wishes, as I happen to know, is the best commentary one could make upon these alleged outrages upon the emperor and his cabinet.

"The alleged rape of the seal belongs to the same mythical category as the other story. It was brought to the palace from the foreign office, where it is kept, by the clerk who has custody of it, in obedience to the orders given personally by the minister for foreign affairs.

"I have inflicted a much longer letter upon you than I intended, but only so becouse I desired you to know my views regarding what seems to me a deliberate attempt, not emanating from a Korean source, to put Japan in a false position.

Opposition Exists.

"Of course there was opposition in Korea to the treaty; it would be foolish to deny that patent fact. But there is no such thing as popular opposition in the sense in which we understand the word in America. There is opposition among the official classes, a great deal of it, honest opposition based upon motives with which we can sympathize, altho we may know them to be mistaken.

"From the Japanese standpoint some greater measure of control over Korean affairs was imperatively necessary. Her's is the responsibility of introducing and enforcing reforms, and of doing all those things for Korea's good which her own rulers have seemed impotent to accomplish.

"It is not a task which Japan has undertaken willingly, but solely because she has been forced to it. But, having undertaken it, and having assumed the responsibility, it seems to me that of right, as well as of necessity, she is entitled to possess the means for doing these things which the world expects her to do in Korea."
