It May Interest You to Know Some t the Technical Points About

WHISKEY.

In the first place there are High Wines.

In the second place there are pure spirits, made from High Wines.

In the third place there is compound Whiskey, which consists of Spirits and Straight Whiskey.

In the fourth place there are patent process or early maturing Whiskies. These goods are made after the cheapest formula, and are matured early by artificial means.

In the fifth place we have regular Sweet Mash Whiskey. These goods are distilled from a sweet mash, and yeast is used to increase the yield. They mature earlier than sour mash, but never develop the same fine qualities.

In the sixth place we have the old-fashioned hand-made Sour Mash Whiskey, such as our fathers drank 50 years ago. This Whiskey is not only superior to anything else made in Kentucky, but is admitted by connoisseurs to be superior to the finest French Brandies as a beverage.

The Old Continental Distillery, while not the only one, is among the few houses remaining in Kentucky where old-fashioned hand-made Sour Mash Whiskey is made. All admit the great superiority of this process, but the yield is so small that few distillers find the limited profit in making it attractive. Its perpetuation depends upon those who are more devoted to quality than to large margins.

The Old Continental Whiskey is made down among the hills of old Nelson county, from pure spring water and the choicest grain. It is mashed by hand in small tubs, and is singled and doubled in copper over fire. It is in every sense of the word a pure Whiskey. Unlike the cheap imitations it does not derange the stomach of those who drink it, and there isn't a headache in a barrel of it. It is soft, rich and fruity, and while it supplies health and strength to the feeble who use it, it also supplies the demand for a beverage of the very highest order.

The fact that it was awarded the gold medal over all other Kentucky Whiskies at the World's Exposition in New Orleans, and also at the World's Fair at Chicago, goes largely to substantiate what we have said in its favor. The proof of the pudding is in the eating, however, and we suggest that you call and sample the "Continental" for yourself.

FAITH, HOPE AND LOVE,

Theme of an Interesting Discourse at the Benton Avenue Christian Church.

Delivered by Rev. J. M. Streator, the Newly Chosen Pastor of the Church.

Large Audiences Greeted the Gentleman Morning and Evening, and Were Pleased and Profited.

Rev. J. M. Streator, the new pastor of the Benton avenue Christian church, occupied the pulpit of his charge yesterday for the first time. His sermons, both morning and evening, were impressive and interesting. The subject for the morning sermon was "Faith, Hope and Love," and the text was 1 Cor. 12:27—13:13. His remarks may be epitomized as follows:

Before the Franco-Prussian war, in the city of Paris, on the banks of the river Seine, was an art gallery in which were placed the pictures of living artists. It was the privilege of any artist who had attained a certain degree of celebrity to place his pictures on exhibition there. The artist's work was then open to criticism. If he heard what he considered to be a just criticism, he could remove the picture to his studio and make the suggested alterations. But when the artist died his picture was taken down, carried over the river and placed in another gallery. There it remained just as he had left it. Other minds might perceive how the design of the artist could be more clearly developed by a few strokes of the brush, but the time for making changes had passed and the picture remained a monument of the artist's best endeavor.

When I read this incident I was forcibly reminded of the similarity of our work and that of the Parisian artist. We are all painting pictures to be exhibited in the great gallery of Time. The picture we are painting is the life we are living; it is the deeds we do, the things we say; it is the duty that we know and do not; the fitly spoken word we leave unsaid.

One reason why we meet with so many failures is the thought that the truly great is beyond our possibility, and the little is not worth attempting. This was what troubled the church in Corinth. The more humble, and the majority of the members, could not do the works of Paul, nor speak with the tongue of Apollos. Because they were denied the gifts allotted by the Spirit to those illustrious men, they would not and should not be expected to be active workers in the great conflict between good and evil, time and eternity, life and death. The apostle told them they could not all be apostles, nor prophets, nor teachers, nor workers of miracles, nor possess the gift of healing, nor speak with tongues, nor interpret. But they should not be discouraged on account of this. It was lawful to earnestly desire the best gifts of the spirit, but there was something better than these; something, the attainment of which the apostle calls "the more excellent way." In the thirteenth chapter this is described as the more excellent way of faith and hope and love. In our life's work God would have us paint a picture of a man or woman full of faith in God and in humanity. Faith is a simple word, and an ignorant person can understand what is signified by it.

One of the best definitions I ever heard of faith was that given by a little girl in Sunday school. It was "to take God at His word and ask no questions about it." Nicodemus did not possess this faith. He had faith that caused him to say we know thou art a teacher sent from God. But as soon as this teacher gave utterance to a truth that the ruler in Israel did not readily comprehend, he doubted and said: "How can these things be?" The child's faith would have accepted the doctrine at once because of its unfaltering trust in God and and in His Christ. The besetting sin of Christians is the lack of faith that trusts implicitly. Caesar said it is easy to believe what we want to believe, and so with the Christian. He believes in the divinity of Christ, the fatherhood of God, the divine nature of the Holy Spirit; he believes all that is said about turning sinners from the error of their ways, but when the same heavenly messenger says, "Forsake not the assembling of yourselves together as the manner of some is," or gives other directions as to how the spiritual life may be kept alive amid the carnal, he is too apt to think that this refers to some other man.

Trusting faith believes that God will never leave us nor forsake us. Mr. Streator said this was forcibly impressed upon his mind by a remark once made by his daughter, who was then a child three or four years old. "During a frightful storm at night she was awakened. The loud thunders, the roaring of the wind, the shaking of the house, for a few minutes, terrified her. Then she asked her mama, 'Can God take care of us in the night as well as in the day?' Her mother answered: 'Yes, my child, just as well at night as in the day.'" With this answer all fears departed, and the little child went calmly and peacefully to sleep, because God could take care of her in the night and in the storm as well as in the brightness of the daytime.

So it should be with Christians. Mr. Streator said he did not understand how "all things worked together for good to those who love God," and he did not think any man could present an argument that would convince him of the truthfulness of this declaration, but it was nevertheless true, and its truthfulness was not a matter of argument, but simply of trust in God's promise that he would so exercise his power that all things in his universe must work together for good to those who love him. Mr. Streator spoke of the necessity of more trust in humanity—and the importance of living so that men must believe in us. The possibility of so living was made plain by several illustrations. "This kind of living," said he, "will make you friends. If a man does not have friends it is his own fault. If he is friendly he will have friends; if he cares for nobody, nobody will care for him. Hope and love were briefly but forcibly presented and plainly illustrated.

Mr. Streator said that the man or the woman who put forth his or her best efforts in painting a man or woman free of faith; fervent in hope and overflowing with love, would find a hearty welcome when the picture was finished and carried over the river into the gallery where that part of God's family which has gone before us dwell. There will be imperfections in what we do, but Jesus the glorified Savior will wipe them all away and receive the trusting servant who had tried to do his Lord's will into his rest forever.

COMING ATTRACTIONS.

Manager Ming has booked for Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, Oct. 2 and 3, the great railroad melodrama, Lincoln J. Carter's "Fast Mail," which will be given a grand scenic production, that in many respects promises to be one of the most remarkable ever in this city. The play is constructed on strictly modern principles. The interest starts at a terrific pace and is not allowed to flag for an instant. The incidents are made doubly thrilling by the mechanical and scenic effects that are employed. There is the rattle and clatter of a patrol wagon as it comes down the street, the whistles, bells, etc., of a Mississippi steamboat leaving her wharf, moonlight effects on the river, the glowing furnaces of the boat and the explosion and breaking up of the steamer. A gigantic piece of real water scenery is presented in the Niagara Falls scene, where the enormous cataract is represented with the roar of water, the seething foam and the rising mist. A freight train of fourteen cars is run across the stage. The caboose is lighted and the engine carries the engineer and fireman. It is everywhere acknowledged to be an unsurpassed achievement in railroad scenic effect. There seems to be no limit to the possibilities of stage mechanism, but "The Fast Mail" seems to have covered all the ground up to the present date. The company is highly spoken of and the play is well constructed, with a strong tinge of comedy to offset the serious element.

In a transcontinental journey nothing can keep out of the cars the volcanic ash or alkali dust raised by the whirl of the passing train. But the Great Northern is entirely free from this annoyance: it runs through no sand deserts and its roadbed is rock ballasted.
