(WRITTEN FOR THE JOURNAL.)

WHO IS ING?

A Dream.

On my couch I sweetly slumbered,
Weary with the work of day;
While the merry moonbeams struggling,
Frolicking about the play.

Troubled was my sleep with visions,
Dreams I never knew before,
Fond creations of my fancy,
Yet I love them dearer more.

Gem-like on my ear I gazing,
[illegible]
Richer than the coiner dowers!

Round her snowy shoulders floated
Ringlets of her flaxen hair,
And a simple band of velvet
Widely sought to bind them there.

Eyes, whose hale were hers to browse,
Smiled upon me slumbering there;
Cheeks, where roses blush the rosiest,
Form as faultless and as fair.

Round her mouth the merry dimples
Played ever little as she smiled;
Who could be this gentle watcher?
Who this blue-eyed laughing child?

Quickly then my arms out stretching,
Clasped her to my beating breast,
Thought not but the fairy darling
I'd ever there, might ever rest.

Bending low I softly whispered,
Lest I frighten, "Who art thou?"
"I am Ing," and she sweetly
Pressed a kiss upon my brow.

Closer to my heart the child,
Pressed her cheek against my own,
Placed her simple zone about me,
Murmured, "Thou art all alone."

"I am come to journey with you
Life's dark pathway, cold and drear,
May I stay?" I fondly answered,
Pressing darling ever dear.

This awoke me from my slumbers,
From a joy to grief and woe,
For the fairy form had vanished,
Who is Ing, I would know?

May 5th, 1862. ANICES.

VERMONT.

We have been surprised, while examining the, 'Abstract of the 7th Census,' to find our neighboring state of Vermont so much ahead of New Hampshire in its agricultural productions. Indeed, it stands a long way ahead of any other New England States in this respect. We have always regarded Vermont the best agricultural state east of New York; but we confess we were not ready to admit so great a superiority as is indicated by the actual returns and figures. Let us for a moment invite the attention of our readers to a comparison of the New England States.

In the first place we find Vermont has about 400,000 more acres of improved land than any other state in New England. New Hampshire stands next. Let us give the figures showing the number of horses, cows, &c., in the four principal New England States. Horses—Maine 41,721, N. H. 34,233, Vt. 51,957, Mass. 42, 216. Milch cows—Me. 133,556, N. H. 94,276, Vt. 146,128, Mass. 130,007. Working oxen—Me. 89,893, N. H. 50,-027, Vt. 48,577, Mass. 46,611. Other cattle—Me. 128,890, N. H. 114,606, Vt. 154,140, Mass. 83,284. Sheep—Maine 441,577, N. H. 384,756, Vt. 1,014,122, Mass. 188,651. Value of live stock—Me. $9,705,926, N. H. $8,871,901, Vt. $12,643, 228, Mass. $8,647, 710.

Produce during the year ending June 1st, 1860: Wheat, bushels, Me. 296,259, N. H. 185,558, Vt. 535,955, Mass. 31,-211. It will be seen that Vermont raises more wheat than all the other New England States combined. Indian corn, bushels of, Me. 1,750,056, N. H. 1,573,-670, Vt. 2,032,396, Mass. 2,345,430.—Oats, bushels of, Me. 2,181,037, N. H. 973,381, Vt. 2,309,734, Mass. 1,165,146. Wool, pounds of, Me. 1,364,934, N. H. 1,108,376, Vt. 3,400,717, Mass. 855,126. Potatoes, bushels of, Me. 3,436,040, N. H. 4,204,019, Vt. 4,951,025, Mass. 3,585,-334. Butter, pounds of, Me. 9,243,811, N. H. 5,877,056, Vt. 12,137,980, Mass. 8,071,370. Cheese, pounds of Me. 2,434,454, N. H. 3,196,563, Vt. 7,720,834, Mass. 7,088,142. Hay, tons of, Me. 752,-689, N. H. 598, Vt. 866,153, Mass 651, 807. Maple sugar pounds of, Me. 93,542, N. H. 1,291,862, Vt. 6,394,267, Mass. 795,525.

By reference to the above figures it will be seen that Vermont has more live stock than any other state compared with it. It has as many sheep as the three others combined. It produces more wheat than all the rest of the New England States. It produces nearly, if not quite as much, wool as all the other New England States. It produces much more butter and cheese than any other one. It produces four times as much maple sugar as all the rest combined, and more than any other state in the Union except New York. Indeed, there are only four states in the Union that produces more sugar of any kind, viz.: New York, Alabama, Louisania, and Texas.

When we take into account the fact that Vermont is also a manufacturing state to a considerble extent, we are satisfied from a careful examination of the returns, that there is no state in the Union, that produces more annually than Vermont, when we consider the extent of its territory and population. We will add that the moral production of Vermont are vastly superior to most and equal to any state in the Union.—Granite State Whig.

DEPTH OF PLANTING CORN.—A communication which we find in the Germantown Telegraph gives the following suggestions and facts, respecting the depth for planting corn:

Cover the corn carefully, and never more than from one and a half to two inches deep. If planted deeper than this, it will be longer coming up, and after it comes up it will grow very well until it is three or four inches high, when it will remain stationary for ten days or two weeks. By examining we will find the first joint is below the surface of the soil, also that the root is decaying, while new ones are being thrown out from the joint; these new roots require some ten or fifteen days for their complete formation, and during this time the plant remains stationary as far as growth is concerned. As soon as the new roots are fully formed the old ones will entirely disappear, and the growth will proceed as usual.

From several experiments with grains taken from the under ear and the outer part of the ear, I have arrived at the following result: Corn planted one inch came up in eight days; that planted one and a half inches required nine and a half days; that two inches deep ten days; two and a half inches deep, eleven and a quarter days; three inches deep, twelve days; three and a half inches deep, thirteen days; four inches deep, fourteen and a half days; five inches deep, eighteen days; six inches deep, twenty-one days. The last lot came up and grew until about three inches high, when it remained stationary for a long time and finally died.

HOW TO GROW MELONS, CUCUMBERS, SQUASHES, ETC.—As soon as the seeds begin to crack the ground in upward vegetation, lay over each hill a half a newspaper or other sheet, a little raised in the centre, and place a hoeful of dust at each corner, so that the winds cannot blow the papers away. Keep them on till the third leaf grows, and no bugs will trouble the vines, and they will grow as fast as in a hot bed.—T. R. M.

IRISH WIT.—The following anecdote we copy from a letter published in the Waterbury American, from a member of the Connecticut Fifth:

One little incident I must relate to you. The orders against pillaging or jayhawking are very stringent. All who are detected in it are most severely punished. On the day after our entrance to Martinsburg, Col. Knipe, of the 46th Penn. Vols., met one of the members of his regiment of Hibernian origin and wit, who was carrying a fine, large goose toward camp, whose head, by being turned around two or three times, was "hanging perfectly loose," as the boys say. The fellow knew the penalty attached to the offence. He also knew that his Colonel was aware that the paymaster had not been seen for a long time—so any story about purchasing the goose would not be swallowed by Col. Knipe.

"Where did you get that goose, sir?" was the Colonel's first question.

"Back on the road a bit, yer honor."

"Well, sir, you know what the consequences are—you have disobeyed orders. What is your name, and what company do you belong to?"

"Arrah now, Colonel, be aisy till I tell me story to you. Yer see, Colonel, as we marched up the town, yesterday, with our gallant flag a stream, out comes a party of dirty, black-guarding, secesh geese, and hissed at the flag, yer honor. It made the blood of me bile, sir, to see the dirty craythers hissing at the flag we're all fighting for, and I marked the foremost one, sir—I marked him till I'd know him agin, it being agaunst orders to lave the ranks. And to-day I went back and hunted him, and broke his head off for him, the same as I would any secesher that would blas down me country's stars and stripes. And I thought, yer honor, it was a sin to cast him away when he was killed, so I brought him along."

Col. Knipe could not refrain from indulging in a hearty laugh at the fellow's wit. So telling him to let things alone that did not belong to him, in future, the Colonel sent him along to roast his goose, and think, while eating it, of his narrow escape from the clutches of the court martial.

INFLUENCING THE BENCH.—One of the daily papers tells the following story of the Justice Brennan, a sort of jolly Sixth Ward politician, who is at present one of our New York Police Magistrates: "You were drunk last night," said the Magistrate to a prisoner brought before him early in the morning. "You're right for once," was the reply. "I shall send you for thirty days to the Island," said the Magistrate. "Oh, don't," said the prisoner. "I will," said the Magistrate. "I'm a printer," said the prisoner. "Are you?" said the Magistrate. "I am so," said the prisoner; "we invited you, you know, to our anniversary dinner, you know." "So you did," said the Magistrate. "How did you like that ham?" asked the prisoner. "It was excellent," said the Magistrate. "And the wine?" asked the prisoner. "That was better yet," said the Magistrate. "And the toast so complimentary to you?" asked the prisoner, with a smile. "That was better than all," said the Magistrate. "I know who wrote the toast," said the prisoner. "You may go—you are discharged!" said the Magistrate.

By request, we publish the following card:—

A CARD.—"Will all men live eternally?" If any clergyman in ——— will sustain the affirmative of the foregoing question in oral debate, he is invited to inform Miles Grant, Boston, Mass., who will endeavor to support the negative. The preliminaries to be arranged by the parties.

P. S. If preferred, he will meet any combined number of gentlemen, provided he is allowed half the time.—G.

PRACTICAL TEXT BOOKS.
Although the instructions in the department of of Book-keeping must, from the nature of the study be given from written manuscript forms, with elaborate oral and black-board elucidations, and lectures, yet great benefit may be drived from the use of reliable books of reference, while in the important department of Commercial Law they are indispensable. To meet this necessity, the following Text Books have been prepared:
BRYANT & STRATTON'S COMMERCIAL LAW, for Mercantile Colleges and Academies, Business Men and the Profession, by AMOS DEAN, LL. D., Prof. of Law in the University of Albany; published by D. Appleton & Co., 443 and 445 Broadway, New York.
