TANYARD For Sale.

THE undersigned offers for sale his splendid Tannery, with all or the land and appurtenances thereto belonging.

I will also sell with the yard, all of the stock of leather tanned, and in process of tan, consisting of from 600 to 700 sides, all of which is nearly ready to be taken out.

I will also sell, if desired, all of my live stock, consisting of Horses, Milch Cows, a lot of stock Hogs, Beef Cattle, &c. Also, my Household and Kitchen Furniture, so as to enable the purchaser to go on with the business without delay. My place is one of the finest locations for the Tannery or Milling business in Northern Alabama. Situated on a range of lofty hills overlooking the Valley of the Tennessee, and commanding one of the finest views east of the Alleghenies. It is unsurpassed in point of health and water—there being two springs of never failing ice-cold water on the premises.

This is also a very desirable place for a good steam saw and grist Mill, there being none within twenty miles of the place. The building enclosing the Tannery was built with special reference to the business, there being nothing necessary now but the machinery. The Memphis and Charleston Railroad, now being put in operation, will afford a good market for all tanner or four that could be spared or ground, as the Mill would be in less than half a mile of the above road.

Any one desiring a good investment for capital in either of the above named businesses, could not do better than by examining my property before purchasing elsewhere. Terms easy. Possession given immediately, if wanted.

Matters and Things in Middle-Tennessee.

Correspondence Nashville Union.

TULLAHOMA, TENN., October 1, 1865.

I believe that I promised you upon my departure from Nashville a letter occasionally, if in the course of my travels through this war-stricken country, I should be able to pick up anything of interest to your readers. Whether the condition of my promise will be fulfilled, I leave yourself and readers to judge. I left Nashville behind me on Monday last, and reached Murfreesboro early the same morning, where I remained three days waiting out in the country occasionally, with an eye to business as well as pleasure. Murfreesboro is rapidly recovering from the effects of her share in the war, and again presents, in a great measure, her olden appearance. The country adjoining the place hardly bears an impression of the late armies that were continually inhabiting it. The farmers are busy in the fields, fences lately torn down are again put up, country houses have an air of neatness and taste about them once more, while a spirit of industry seems to repair late damages. It seems to animate all classes. The cotton fields all along the road from Murfreesboro to Shelbyville are alive with negroes picking cotton, who do not seem to feel that indolent freedom which characterizes their "cullud" brethren in the larger cities.

The cotton crop will no doubt be a good one, although an experienced grower told me he only made five hundred pounds more where he used to make a thousand in olden times.

I was glad to notice that the people generally seem inclined to pursue peaceful avocations, and submit quietly to the new order of things, with the spirit of good, law abiding citizens. All classes seem to have abandoned late prejudices, and a friendliness between combatants in both the political and military arrays seems to prevail. I reached Tullahoma on Thursday morning, and the day after took a lumbering vehicle for Shelbyville, on the so-called turnpike road. The jigging and jostling on this road did not improve my disposition, but I kept my temper, which retained all of its sweetness to the very end of the journey. Just outside of Tullahoma, on the Fayetteville road, stands a gallows erected by the notorious General Payne, of Gallatin and Paducah infamy. I could not repress a feeling of horror when myself and companion left the main road and stood in the awful shadow of the scaffold, on which I am told many, hastily condemned and speedily shrived, were executed. The acts of this man Payne, during the season of his command here, stand written with horrible distinctness on the pages of those who fell under the displeasure of that unsparing executioner. As the mothers and children on the Scottish border trembled at the name of the Black Douglas, so do the white lips and trembling hearts of the mother and infant here murmur the name of Payne. I turned away from the terror-conjuring gibbet, and left the barren and desolate field on which it stands with feelings of infinite disgust.

As I said before, the turnpike from Tullahoma to Shelbyville is so called, for it resembles more a narrow path intersected with ditches and ruts than the broad smooth thoroughfares which justly bear the name of pikes. A mile out of the Depot of the N. & C. R. R. on Monday, and did not reach Murfreesboro until Friday. Nashville must secure the trade of Middle and East Tennessee, Northern Alabama and Northern Georgia, and if a preference both in tariff, rates and speed is given Cincinnati and Louisville, she must inevitably suffer. Our Merchants would do well to look into this matter. I returned to Tullahoma yesterday evening through a cold and drizzling rain. The weather has turned decidedly cold since and Autumn promises an early foretaste of winter. Truly yours Etc.

The Morgan County Troubles.—Troops Needed.

Special to the Cincinnati Gazette.

LEXINGTON, KY., Oct. 2.

The troops sent down to Morgan county have returned, bringing with them Mr. Gearden, the U. S. Collector.

Captain Johnson, who commanded the expedition, reports that on his approach the guerrillas disbanded and retreated in all directions. Captain Johnson was butchered and his pickets fired on and driven in at night. The country is full of robbers and guerrillas, and the people are in terror. The guerrilla Williams has forbidden the collection of any more United States taxes, and Mr. Gearden says he cannot go back and collect the revenue without troops to protect him.

Gen. Hobbin has ordered the United States forces to at once occupy and garrison Bath, Floyd, Morgan and Wolfe counties.

The Conservatives assert that the order sending all the troops from Kentucky will reach here on Wednesday, at which time martial law will be abolished.

Mr. Sumner has written a letter to the New York Post on the constitutional abolition amendment, contending that it has been ratified by three-fourths of the States, and is virtually a part of the Constitution. He quotes the Constitution providing for adopting a proposed amendment to be ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, and holds that only three-fourths of the States "actually participating in the Government" are required; and in support of this view quotes Mr. Rodop, who discusses the subject in the third volume of his commentaries on criminal law: "If the matter were one relating to any other subject than slavery, no legal person would, over doubt that, when three States with Legislature and States without Legislature, and the Constitution, submits a question to the determination of the Legislatures of three-fourths of the States which have Legislatures. In fact, it does not require either legal wisdom or legal acumen to see this, provided we look at the point discussed from the popular subject of slavery."

The Congressional Oath.

In July, 1862, during the very heat of the rebellion, Congress passed an act requiring a stringent oath of all who should hereafter hold any office under the United States Government. The oath required the party to swear that he had voluntarily given no aid, countenance, counsel or encouragement to persons engaged in armed hostility to the United States; that he had never voluntarily borne arms against the United States, and that he had held no office and yielded no military support to any pretended Government within the United States and hostile thereto. The oath was intended to exclude all participants in the rebellion, and as such has been taken by all office-holders since its passage.

This oath now stares in the face every candidate for Congress in the South, and narrows the opportunities of selection down to very close limits. In his appointment of officers, the President, it is charged, has disregarded this oath and given positions to those who could not take it, while he has given his opinion, unofficially, in answer to enquiries from Virginia, that he had no moment of knowing when Congress would do in regard to the test, while he wished that true and loyal men might be elected. This seems to intimate his belief that the notion of such an oath is within the power of Congress, and that Congress alone can dispense with it.

The whole question becomes of the greatest importance, in view of the Executive pardons, and their effect and scope. The constitution declares that each house is the sole judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members," a provision which, Kent says, is "to preserve pure and genuine representation, and to control the evils of irregular, corrupt, and tumultuous elections," and this decision, he says, should be "regulated by known principles of law." The qualifications of members of Congress are made known in article 1, section 2, of the Constitution, and beyond these Congress cannot go in determining what these
