MEXICO.

Proclamation and Decree from the Empire--Death to all Men Taken Arms in Hand--Punishment to Guerrillas and to All Those Conniving with Them--Sonora Declares for the French--Flight of Pesqueria in Arizona.

From special Correspondent N. Y. Tribune.

CITY OF MEXICO, Oct. 10, 1865.

The most important event of the week just elapsed is a proclamation of the Emperor. It declares that the departure of Mr. Juarez for the United States deprives the resistance against the Empire of the character of a regular war, and that there is no longer any reason to prolong the indulgence which the Government has hitherto manifested against armed bands known under the name of guerrillas.

Hereafter the right of belligerents will be refused to any officers or soldiers who are at present laying bare certain portions of the country, and every one of them taken arms in hands will be shot. Conniving with guerrillas, and even the simple fact of notezing against them, are also punished. Here is the proclamation of the Empe or, which precedes the decree, in which the repressive measures are indicated:

MEXICO, Oct. 2, 1865.

MEXICANS: The cause sustained with so great constancy and courage by Don Benito Juarez had already succumbed, not only before the national will, but also before the law which this leader indicated in support of his titles. This course had degenerated in war of bands; to-day this war is abandoned by the fact that its chief has left the territory of the country.

The national government has for a long time been indulgent; it has lavished clemency to leave to those who were misled and to those who were ignorant of the facts, the possibility of joining themselves to the majority of the nation and to come back in the path of duty. The Empire has reached its end; honest people have surrounded his banner and have accepted the just and liberal principles which govern its policy. Disorder has only been maintained by a few leaders led astray by unpatriotic passions, and, with them, by demoralized men without political principles, and by an unbridled soldiery, which always remains as the last and sad vestige of civil war.

Hereafter the struggle will not be carried on but by the honorable men of the nation and/or banditti of adventurers. To day indulgence must cease, for it could only benefit the despotism of the bands—those who ret villages on fire, who assassinate peaceful citizens, unfortunate old men and defenseless women.

Strong in its power, the Government will hereafter be inflexible in the punishment—for punishment is claimed by the rights of civilization, by those of humanity and by moral exigencies. MAXIMILIAN.

The decree which follows this proclamation states that all persons belonging to armed bands or associations not legally authorized, whether or not acting under political pretenses and whatever may be the number of the men composing it, its character and organization will be judged by military commissions. If they are declared guilty of even having belonged to a band, they will be condemned to death. The sentence will be carried out within 24 hours.

All persons lending willing assistance to guerrillas, either in supplying them with money or any other kind of resources; those who give them information, advice or counsel; those who sell them arms, horses, food, or any kind of material for war; those who keep relations with them, or hide them in their houses or property; those who spread news calculated to disturb public order; and all the proprietors of farms who will not give advice in proper time of the presence of guerrillas in their neighborhood, will also be liable to be judged by military commission, and, if found guilty, to be put to death.

These measures, as you will observe, are exceedingly rigorous, but in the estimation of men acquainted with Mexican character and habits, they are the only ones which can put an end to the war of guerrillas which is now dealing to the country.

The Colonization Bureau has definitely been organized and placed under the direction of Mr. F. Maury, who had already been appointed Counselor of State. Mr. Maury has been intrusted with the care of establishing agents in Virginia, in the two Carolinas, in Texas, Missouri, California, New Orleans and Mobile. An indemnity of $1,500 a year is granted to these immigrants.

General Magruder has been placed at the head of the Central Bureau of the lands affected to colonization. These agencies have American emigrants for their principal object.

In Sonora the Imperialists are everywhere triumphant. They did not even have the trouble to expel the Juarists from that State, for the population itself did it. The French troops had nothing else to do but to support the movement of the people, who decared themselves in their favor as soon as they approached.

The French Colonel Garnier, who had left Guaymas on the 23d of July, reached Hermosillo on the 29th, and was enthusiastically received by the people on of that city. The last refugees of the Juarist forces had left the city to march upon Urio, besieged by the Imperialists under command of Teran Y. Barios. The latter informed of their advance, marched against them on the 30th of July at 11 o'clock at night, and put them in complete rout. The next day Urea, having been abandoned by the Juarists, Mr. Teran Y. Barios took possession of it.

The giving up this city, the capital of Sonora, by General Pesqueira and Garcia Morales completes the defeat of the Juarists in the State, which is now under the undisputed control of the French. Col. Garnier having granted a full amnesty to all those who would lay down their arms, hind job and hard-sided opportunity to submit to the Empire.

General Pesqueira, the General-in-Chief of all the Juarist forces in Sonora, had crossed the frontier and taken shelter in Sonora.

Important from England—Our Claims on the British Government.

By the steamship Hibernian, which arrived at Farther Point yesterday, we have received important information affecting our future relations with Great Britain. On the 7th of April last Mr. Adams, our Minister in London, wrote to Earl Russell, intimating in diplomatic language that the Washington Cabinet held England responsible for the damage done by the Alabama and her piratical companions. On May the 4th, nearly a month afterwards, Earl Russell curtly replied that British liability could not be measured by United States loss, and that the real and only question was whether the British Government had faithfully and honestly performed their duty as neutrals. The same day Mr. Adams rejoined that the insurgent States had neither belligerents at sea solely by reason of vessels furnished them by England, and he charged the Custom House officials at Liverpool with flagrant negligence in permitting the Alabama to escape.

Three months passed away without any reply from the British Foreign Office. At the end of that time Earl Russell addressed to Mr. Adams a despatch justifying the conduct of his government and declining the offer of arbitration which had previously been made by Mr. Seward. "The law officers of the crown (said Lord Russell) must be held to be better interpreters of British statutes than any foreign government can be presumed to be. Her Majesty's Government must therefore decline to make reparation or compensation for captures made by the Alabama or to refer the question to any foreign State."

In place of the arbitration thus rejected the British Foreign Secretary proposed a commission of inquiry. Our Minister, his backbone stiffening as the negotiations grew more entangled, answered that he did not believe this alternative would be acceptable to his government, and he added that the recognition of the South as belligerents by England "was such an act as was never before done by the mother to a daughter in a state of amity," and that the blockade of Southern ports was "the consequence, not the cause, of British policy."

At this stage the correspondence stops; but a somewhat remarkable circumstance now comes to light. It was exactly at this period that a London journal, supposed to have exclusive sources of information, announced that the negotiations respecting the Alabama claims had reached a critical and unpleasant stage. The government being questioned on the subject utterly denied that such was the case. Lord Palmerston assured the House of Commons that the question was being discussed "in the most friendly and amicable terms" and Mr. Layard, his Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs, went further, and said that no new claim had been made since President Johnson's accession to power. How far these assertions were sincere may be judged from the fact that the publication of the correspondence has called forth openly expressed fears from a portion of the British press of a hostile rupture with this country.

The latest phase which the difficulty has assumed may be gathered from Mr. Seward's recent speech at Auburn, in which he said:—"The discussion of these claims involves principles essential to the independence of States and harmony among the nations. I believe that the President will conduct this part of our affairs in such a manner as to yield and receive indemnities justly due, without any compromise of the national dignity and honor." According to this Mr. Seward evidently means to insist upon arbitration. As the matter at present stands, a portion of the British press openly express their fears of a hostile rupture with this country.—N. Y. Herald.
