BOYS MAKE MEN.

When you see a young school-boy
Spending his time in idle sport,
With no care in his careless bosom,
Do you think he will be a man?
Possessed by the child's unbridled joy,
Smile upon his innocent face—when
He's grown he'll not be a man.

When you see a boy at his studies
Over his work his soul is set,
Shun your duties for no pleasures—
Do not say he will be a man.
You mistake, you know, young blossoms
Soon will develop the boy; then
Place your money on good vantage,
Where he will go, boys make men.

Be not your money on some pleasure
Into the hands of every boy;
For each child is reckoning interest
In his own way in life's joy.
College or some business training—
They are all right, money's spent;
And self-confidence, science, science;
And remember, boys make men.

DALLAS, September 27.

To the Editor of the Dallas Herald.

Please allow me a few remarks concerning the commercial interest of our growing little city, oversights, etc., of her business men.

Ten months since the freight on a bale of cotton from Dallas to Galveston via the Houston and Texas Central Railway, was six dollars and five cents. To-day the freight over the same road is four dollars. I ask, what is the cause of this small reduction? I answer it is competition, occasioned by the completion of the Texas Pacific Railway to Dallas, giving us a direct outlet to New Orleans via Red River; also the connection of the Great Northern and Texas and Pacific roads at Minneola, giving us a through bill of lading to Galveston on cotton, hides, and other produce, with but one transfer, thus giving this route some advantage over the Central road although it is about forty-six miles longer; but the Central, having to transfer at Corsicana delays freights, besides incurring a very heavy expense to the company, and to transfer at Houston makes one more transfer to Galveston than by this other route.

It seems to me that the cotton buyers as well as commission merchants of our city have entirely overlooked the importance of getting cheap freights on produce from this place. They must remember that there are two all rail routes from Dallas to Houston, whose interests are entirely opposite. I think that, should the Texas and Pacific and Great Northern Railroads propose to carry our cotton to Galveston for one dollar and fifty cents or two dollars and fifty cents per bale, transferring only at Houston, it would show too much partiality to pay the Central road four dollars per bale to carry cotton to the same point, having to transfer at Corsicana and Houston, necessarily keeping your cotton from market a much longer time than by this other route. Therefore, shippers at this place should consult the Dallas agents of both these railroad companies, and give their cotton to the one that signed a bill of lading at the lowest rate.

What is the use of these advantages unless we exercise them? I have talked with the agents of this other route to Galveston (which our people have so completely ignored), and they say that they are entitled to a portion of the patronage of our place, and ask that they be consulted when shipments are to be made from this place. Hence I again urge the importance of making contracts here for all the produce shipped from this point. Should we get the cheap rates of freight that we are entitled to from this point Dallas could be made the best cotton and hide market in Northern Texas. I will here add that we have equally as good facilities for getting freights from other cities to this place.

The Cairo and Fulton Railroad will soon be completed to Texarkana, there connecting with the Trans-Continental and Pacific, giving us a through route from St. Louis down the Mississippi river, as well as from New York, Baltimore and other eastern cities, by rail to Cairo, connecting with the Cairo and Fulton road there, thence over the Pacific to Dallas. We are also connected with St. Louis and New York by rail via the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad, as well as both New Orleans and St. Louis by river to Shreveport, and over the Pacific to Dallas, besides our two routes to Galveston, there receiving from New York by rail, and from New Orleans by the Morgan line. With all these competing lines for getting freights to this point, and our merchants shipping in large quantities as they do direct from importers and manufacturers, Dallas can offer inducements to dealers in the country superior to any town in Northern or Western Texas.

Shippers, look to your interest, and have all your freight shipped under contract. MERCHANT.

A heavy rain at St. Louis on Wednesday last was slightly intermixed with snow.

What a Lightning Stroke Revealed.

An Ohio paper tells a very strange and startling story of the revelation made by a stroke of lightning a few days ago. There once seems to have existed a secluded grove on the Miami Valley. A portion of it was one which was evidently used for a burial place. The lightning, in shivering the fragments of what appeared to be a decayed post, disclosed a human skeleton, yellow with age, which instantly fell to pieces and was scattered over several feet of the surrounding pasturage. With the remains was also found a few buttons of ancient pattern and a leather pocket book, in good state of preservation. The pocket book told the sad and tragic story of the disembodied skeleton. It contained papers which were now and discolored, and covered with rude pencillings, scarcely legible but enough could be deciphered to show that they had been written by a soldier in the Revolutionary army—a man by name who had been an aid and companion to General Washington. His name was Roger Vardemburg, and he held the rank of captain.

After participating in the privations of Valley Forge, and in the retreat across the Jerseys, and serving as one of Cuyler's West Point, he was ordered with St. Clair against the Northwestern Indians. On November 3, 1791, he was wounded and captured by the Indians. He subsequently escaped, however, and being hotly pressed by his savage foes, he took refuge in this oak tree. The hollow afforded a convenient retreat and he allowed himself to drop into it. Then too late, he found that he had miscalculated the depth of the hollow, and there was no escape. The remaining hours of his life were spent in writing a diary, the entries of which show a terrible record of unmerited suffering and desperation. A period of eleven days he patiently endured his sensations as he felt himself slowly sinking into death. The story is certainly a strange one, and there is nothing improbable about it.

The True Love.

[From the Philadelphia Telegraph.]

The schooner True Love launched in 1764 at one of our docks, sails down now under the command of Captain Thomas Weeks for Antwerp, with a cargo of petroleum, rosin and turpentine. Since she has been here hundreds of people have visited her. The vessel's dimensions are—length, 36 feet; breadth, 27 feet; and depth 15 feet.

A beautiful flag, manufactured by Messrs. Horsman & Co., which to-day was presented to Captain Wenzell by Mr. Samuel Sines on behalf of the Pennsylvania Salt Manufacturing Company. The testimonial is a very handsome one, and will be, doubtless, much prized by the present owner of a vessel that has crossed and re-crossed the ocean for more than a quarter of a century, and now that the men that built her are dead and forgotten, still faithfully performs the duties for which she was intended. The words of old Captain Wells, who commanded the brig in 1861, are yet applicable. Captain Wells used to say: "The True Love is as handy as a cutter, safe as a Pilot-boat, light as a bottle, and ready now as of old, to do her duty faithfully."

An American Belle in London.

A correspondent writes: "One beautiful American, Miss Polk, has, of course, been invited to Chiswick. You can not imagine anything more lovely than she looked at the Chiswick garden party which the Princess of Wales gave on the 25th of July. Her dress was original, and yet not at all eccentric. She is never eccentric, you know. As a clever man says, Miss Polk's taste in toilet matters amounts to genius. The toilet I speak of—which was greatly admired by the Princess—was a straw colored silk made with a drawn skirt, very old style but very good style, with a gauze overdress of the same shade. Her bonnet was Rembrandt shape, brown with yellow roses. She was the most charming looking creature I ever saw. I should like if I were to say that Miss Polk was the rage. Such a young woman is never 'the rage.' She is too comme il faut, too elegant and dignified. But I do say that she has created the admiration of the exclusive few, who, in the London world of fashion, are infallible."

A young lady in McMinnville, while out on the hills blackberrying was confronted by a cougar, one day last week. She yielded up her pannier, and one last seen of the cougar he was endeavoring to find some local news in the Yankfill Reporter and, while engaged in the vain pursuit, the lady quietly meandered homeward.
