MONTREAL DIVIDED ON RECIPROCITY.

Twenty Millions of American Money Invested in Factories Friendly to Tariff.

BIG MARKET IS AT STAKE.

Citizens Favor a Trade Arrangement With United States: Factory Men Are Opposed to It.

John H. Raftery, The Republic's special correspondent, is now in Canada to investigate the advantage of reciprocity with the Dominion. This is the tenth of a series of his articles.

BY JOHN H. RAFTERY.

REPUBLIC SPECIAL.

Montreal, Quebec, Aug. 28.—From Montreal, the busiest, the most populous, and in every way the most influential city in the Dominion of Canada, it is well to write a letter bearing closely upon the fact that the tariff wall between the United States and Canada is the cornerstone of the recent growth, expansion and prosperity of manufacturing industries in this part of the country.

In seven years more than $20,000,000 of American money has been invested at Montreal in factories. An equal sum of Canadian money has been put into enterprises which originated in the United States, but which have been brought hither and installed for the original and final purpose of capturing the Canadian market by evading the tariff.

KEEN FOR FOREIGN CAPITAL.

The Province of Quebec, Montreal, especially, is keen for the induction of foreign capital. Nothing could have better nourished this desire than the Canadian port duty on articles of foreign manufacture and the prohibitive American impost on stuffs made in Canada.

Within seven years a total of nearly $20,000,000 has been invested in manufacturing businesses here, to the end that this Province and its tributary territory are no longer dependent upon or subservient to American factories in the lines included.

In Montreal, if anywhere in Canada, you will find that the Dominion manufacturer is pleased with the tariff obstruction that the public dislikes. Only half the factories of this great city of half a million population are of American origin, energized chiefly by American money and devoted to nothing but the "main chance."

The Canadian capitalists associated with these American-born industries are lenient of all sentiment. American models, American methods, American policies are used here to the end that Montreal threatens to become the fountain head and focal point of Canadian manufacturing industries.

NOT FRIENDLY TO RECIPROCITY.

The manufacturer here is no advocate of reciprocity. American as many of the Montreal manufacturers are, they are making no outcry for reciprocity or free trade. The Canadian branch of the American factory here has an advantage in tariff conditions as they exist that works most successfully.

England, in spite of the preferential discount, is at a disadvantage as compared with the local factor. For the British factory, exporting to Canada is not exempt, while the American-Canadian rival, operating here so as to evade the tariff, has the "call" both in resident labor and in contiguity to the vast market at stake.

Bear in mind that Montreal is the woolen and cotton manufacturing center of the Dominion. It buys all of its raw material from the United States, for raw material is free of import in these lines, and the States furnish the natural market. Labor, skilled and unskilled, is cheaper here than in the United States, although not cheaper than that of Britain. But the Canadian tariff and the long water haul from Liverpool, Glasgow and London leave the advantages wholly with the local makers of garments, contrivances and woven material.

ARE DOING WELL ENOUGH.

Now, you go to the Montreal manufacturer and ask him what sort of international arrangement he wants, and he will tell you that he is doing well enough, thank you. The chances are nine to ten that you will find an American superintendent, an American manager, or an American proprietor in the factories of Montreal. If you go through the factory itself you will find a preponderance of skilled laborers from the United States. Here now are money, brains, labor—all inducted from Uncle Sam's domain to develop and realize upon the resources of Canada—and induced to come here by what? The desire, and, perhaps, the necessity, to evade the tariff wall which separates the two countries.

RECONCILED TO THE TARIFF.

It is fit here and now to say judiciously that the advent of American money, American ingenuity and American industry is doing more than anything else to reconcile Canada, and especially Quebec Province, to the restrictive conditions of the tariffs of the two countries.

The American manufacturer who comes here, forced to do so by apparently insurmountable requisites of our international trade relations, becomes at once a friend of those circumstances which induced him to establish a "Canadian branch."

The big factories started here by American capital have had, so far as the city and Provinces are concerned, a beneficial effect. They give work to the natives; they help to stop emigration to the States; they circulate money; they enhance all activities, whether civic or provincial. In a word, Montreal and Quebec are pleased with the incursion of American money, American industry, American methods of manufacturing and trade. Being pleased and looking for the initial cause of the happy conditions, they say: "It is the tariff."

Here, then, is a phase of the situation which to an American does not present itself in any of the maritime Provinces:

Visiting to-day, say fifty of the manufacturers and jobbers of Montreal, I find the former uniformly favorable to the existing tariff embargoes. What could be more logical, or, for that matter, more relish? But with the jobber, the wholesaler, it is different. He would like to have an open market. He wants reciprocity, and he is in the majority, of course. He would wish to buy in New York, in Boston, in Chicago, in open competition for low prices and equal values if there were no intervening tariff.

The consumer, more numerous still, also wants his wares at the lowest price consistent with staple values. So that the retail dealer, the jobber and the consumer of Montreal and Quebec are, for selfish but sequential reasons, favorable to reciprocity with the States.

MANUFACTURER WANTS TARIFF.

But the manufacturing element in politics, in influence, in weight of invested interests, outweighs public opinion and has better access to the dominant parties of politics. You may walk the streets of Montreal asking questions of shopkeepers, buyers, mechanics and idlers, and gain the impression that free trade in the continent is the wish and purpose of the people. But an hour's talk with the invested manufacturing chiefs will prove to you that the rich minority is more powerful at Ottawa and more effective at the polls than public sentiment.

And it may edify American readers to know that this overshadowing, preponderant pro-tariff dogmatism in Quebec, and especially in Montreal, is exercised by manufacturers of American origin and of American methods, in the lines described thus briefly it is evident that Canada is not "getting the worst" of the existing tariff regulations between the two countries.

So far as Montreal itself is concerned, there is no British imperial sentiment at work. If there is any sentimentalism active, it is wholly religious, and dominantly Roman Catholic, and, therefore, anti-English. I have in my hand the report of a speech made by a Liberal "spellbinder," in which the orator told his audience of French habitants that Queen Victoria, with her own hand, murdered Sir John Thompson because he had changed his religion from Anglican Protestantism to Roman Catholicism. And the audience believed its orator. The rural districts of Quebec offer the most illiterate electorate to be found in all of this continent outside of Old Mexico. They are French by extraction, Canadians by necessity, English by tolerance and Americans in desire.

PEOPLE FAVOR RECIPROCITY.

The Province of Quebec, in which Montreal is at the head of tide-water navigation, has no winter port. With its shipments it cannot reach the outside world except by a long rail haul to Halifax and a shorter rail haul to Portland, Me. Its winter commerce, therefore, trends logically and unavoidably toward the United States, but the American tariff disbars considerable commerce, and the traffic from Montreal and Quebec through the ports of Maine, Massachusetts and New York is all in bond, bound for the British ports and the free harbors of the West Indies.

The preponderance of sentiment in favor of reciprocity with the United States is an excitable and evident result of the conditions here set forth with regard to Montreal and this Province. But it must be remembered that the manufacturing interest, which is in the ascendency as to political influence and which logically is largely American, is in favor of the existing tariffs.

FRANKFURTER BOILER BURSTS

Three Persons Probably Will Die as Result of Accident.

New York, Aug. 28.—Three persons will probably die as the result of the explosion of a frankfurter boiler in the partment of Israel Rosenweig, in a tenement in Norfolk street to-day. They are: Rosenzweig's wife, Pauline; his 3-year-old son, Mendel, and his 3-months-old baby, Lena. Rosenzweig himself had a narorw escape.

The explosion and a small fire that followed created a panic in the tenement. Rosenzweig is a frankfurter peddler. He filled the fuel tank of his frankfurter boiler with kerosene and lighted the wick, it is thought, without screwing on the stopper. His wife and children were in the room when the explosion occurred, scattering the blazing oil about the room and setting their clothing on fire.
