WALLINGFORD.

There is trouble on Oak street over a mistake in the locating of the street line. About five years ago George Stevens purchased of the Oneida community the tract of land on Oak street running west from Dan Mitchell's property to W. A. Curtis' lot, a distance of about 270 feet. As the fence originally on the South street line had used up and the exact street line not known to Mr. Bradley, the Community's agent, A. D. McLean, made a survey and map with measurements which called for 108 feet east on land of Dan Mitchell, and on north by highway. As the surveyor was not acquainted with the landmarks he made a decided mistake and located the street line just 15 feet too far north, as Dan Mitchell's deed only calls for 93 feet and runs to the same point as Stevens' lot. A few weeks since Stevens sold the property to Albert Guyott, who has put up a house and it proves that the entire verandah is out on the street, as the corner of the house is just on the line of the street. There are certain points of the original fence left to locate the old line of road and as Guyott was about to put a fence the entire front of his property and 15 feet into the highway, R. S. Austin, who owns the property on the opposite side of the street, has notified him than an injunction would be served if the attempt was made. All that remains for Guyott to do is to go for Stevens and he to go for the Community's agent for selling property that did not belong to them, but to the borough as a highway. Guyott is naturally indignant over the matter and states that he will make Stevens settle for all expenses that may be incurred.

For some time past there has appeared at different times in some of the out of town papers malicious and libelous articles reflecting upon the character of several of our prominent citizens, containing insinuations and misquoting conversations and crediting to them statements that were never made. The attacks have mostly reflected on Judge Hubbard, Colonel Leavenworth and Representatives Newton and Hough, all who happened to be staunch republicans. The attacks have all emanated from the same source and are easily traceable to the same persons, who have, or fancy they have reasons, for their underhanded attacks. The whole is under the cloak of the electric light question. The attacks have been scandalous and the authors should attend to their legitimate business, if they have any, and not attempt to throw discredit upon our citizens who command the respect of the great majority of our citizens and taxpayers. The defeat at the polls on election day last fall still rankles in the minds of some of the disappointed office seekers, who seek to vent their spite on the more successful ones.

The local Methodists will organize a society here on Friday evening, meeting at Judd's block on Center street.

The Kickapoo Medicine company will open up in town hall to-morrow evening.

Officer Reilly killed a muskrat in front of Jacob's barber shop on Center street Sunday evening.

Yesterday's recorded real estate changes are: Emory Morse to P. J. Kelly, three acres of land on turnpike. P. J. Kelly to Emory Morse, lot 50x150 feet on Hall avenue. Lyman Beckley to L. M. Hubbard, 95x95 feet on corner of Center and Main streets.

James Dwyer, aged ten years, died yesterday morning down in Northford. The body will be taken to New Haven for burial on Wednesday.

Judge Hubbard and R. S. Austin have purchased the Beckley building and property, corner of Main and Center streets. It is believed that before many years the old unsightly building will be removed and a block placed on the site that will be a credit to the borough.

At a special communication of Compass lodge No. 9, F. and A. M., held last evening, the report of the committee was accepted and it was unanimously voted to occupy for their lodge room the new and fine rooms in Judd's new block on Center street. The new quarters will be among the finest in Wallingford. The rental is $200 a year for fifty-two nights, every Wednesday evening, with the privilege of an exclusive lease at a later date.

The eloquent Corporal James Tanner will lecture in Meriden April 3 under the auspices of Merriam post. Quite a delegation of G. A. R. men from Wallingford will attend.

THE TOWN GOVERNMENT.

What the Honorable Henry B. Harrison Said About it at Woodstock.

Men renowned in arts and in arms—statemen, scholars, poets, warriors—have assembled here with us to celebrate the birth of the republic, the doctrine that "government of the people ought to be government for the people and by the people."

For a solemn confession of that faith I known of no place in the world more appropriate, in some respects, than the place where we now stand. For this town of Woodstock is a Connecticut town. As such it is endowed with all the rights and powers which belong to every Connecticut town. It is a political organism of a peculiar character, worth the careful study of every political philosopher. It is in fact a little republic in itself, an indestructible republic, in which the principle of democratic government has full play, and where the free action of that principle is guaranteed by the strongest constitutional defenses. It may be worth our while to look at this little republic for a few moments and see how it is organized, what are its powers, and how it acts.

The people of Woodstock number not far from three thousand. They constitute a town. All the powers of the town are exercised by the "freemen" or legal voters, some five or six hundred in number. The suffrage is manhood suffrage, and the freemen are all equal in rights. They constitute the legislative body, the town meeting, and they choose all the town officers. The basis of the town organization therefore it is absolutely democratic. The town is a free democracy.

It is indestructible. The constitution confirms its perpetual existence. The government of the state cannot destroy it or merge it in any other town without its consent.

It elects its own officers of local government—not by permission of the general assembly, but by its own right. The constitution gives it the indefeasible right of electing annually its own selectmen and all its other numerous officers of local police. The state government cannot take away this right or interfere with it.

It elects its own justices of the peace, each of whom is vested with a limited, but still considerable, jurisdiction in civil and criminal cause. The state government cannot appoint them. Nobody but the freemen of the town itself can appoint them.

The officers of the justice courts—the grand jurors, who prosecute criminals before them, and the constable, who serves their process and executes their judgments—are appointed by the town. The state goverment cannot appoint them, or interefere with the action of the town in appointing them, so long as their offices exist.

As a probate district it elects its own judge of probate, who exercises that wide jurisdiction over the settlement of estates,, the appointment of trustees and guardians, and so forth, which is usually exercised by courts of probate, or surrogates' or orphans' courts, as they are sometimes called in other rstates.

A probate district may include two or more towns, but each one of thirteen out of fifteen towns in this county is a probate district by itself. Woodstock is such a district. The freemen of this town, therefore, choose their own judge of probate, and the state government cannot take away or limit their right to do so. And this probate system—strange as the fact may seem to a lawyer unacquainted with it—works well, for reasons which I have not itme now to explain.

By permission of the state the town exercises many other rights and powers, rights and powers which the state could take away, but is not likely to take away—many of them being consecrated by tradition and rooted in the habits of the people.

It exercises control over public education within its limits and generally over all its local affairs.

Its board of health is vested with those great and indefinite "police powers," so called, over persons and property which must be vested somewhere for the protection of the public health.

It legislates in town meetings on a great variety of subjects specially enumerated in the statute book;— and, finally, it possesses the broad general powers expressed by the statute in these words: "Towns may make such regulations for their welfare, not concerning matters of a criminal nature nor repugnant of the laws of the state, as they may deem expedient, and enforce them by penalties not exceeding five dollars for each breach." Am I not right, then, in saying that this town of Woodstock is a republic, a free democratic republic, an indestructible republic, exercising great and various powers of government, many of which are beyond the reach of interference, even from the government of the state itself?

This little republic has another indefeasible right—the right of sending two representatives to every session of the general assembly—an immemorial right which the government of the state cannot infringe.

Connecticut is a small state, almost invisible among greater states of this Union, and yet within her narrow limits are one hundred and sixty-seven of these little republics. By their indissoluble union they constitute the state, and exercise through the state government those governmental powers which it is practically impossible for them to exercise individually.

This system of government more or less closely resembles that which prevails in some of the other states, especially the other New England states, but I think, although I will not positively assert, that here in Woodstock, and in the other Connecticut towns, the democratic principle of government by the people is carried out more radically and protected more thoroughly by constitutional safeguards than it is in almost any other state or country in the world.

I do not say that this system has no defects. It has defects which in some of the larger towns have made necessary the establishment of supplementary city and borough organizations, (also democratic in character, however,) to co-operate with the town organizations within those towns.

I do not say that the system is perfect in all other respects. I do say that it forms a broad and deep granitic base for the free commonwealth which for two centuries and a half has rested firmly upon it. It has answered for us the question whether a republican government can long endure. For since it was established here kingdoms and empires have risen and fallen, while it has remained unshaken.

For two hundred and fifty years this system has existed in Connecticut, varying in details, but unchanged in principle and substance. It has been strong in peace and strong in war. If you ask whether it has promoted the happiness and prosperity of the people look around you.

Here then, if anywhere, may we appropriately celebrate the birth of the great republic; here in the center of the little republic of Woodstock, a republic older than the great republic itself, though younger by more than a hundred years than some of her sister republics of Connecticut.

Most cordially do I unite with my fellow citizens in welcoming our distinguished guests to Woodstock, to Windham county, and to the state of Connecticut.

At One Hundred and Six.

A letter to the Berlin, Conn., News is as follows:

Berlin, Conn., March 20, 1895.—In your last week's issue you mentioned Mrs. Betsey Saunders as the oldest person in the state. I would like to say that I believe Granby has the honor of having the oldest, for on Thursday, March 14, Aunt Sally Brown reached her one hundred and sixth birthday. Incredible as it may seem, she possesses all her faculties as perfect as fifty years ago. Sleeping upstairs, she goes up and down unaided; makes her own bed and very frequently her daughter's, with whom she lives. She spends most of her time reading her bible and making patchwork, which she sews without the use of glasses. Nearly a month ago she took an eight mile ride in an open sleigh, and the next day I saw her walking on the plazza. Only last summer she went into the garden and picked a pint of ripe strawberries. She has large number of visitors which she is always glad to see, telling them of the good old times of ninety and a hundred years ago. A. V.

BIG DYNAMITE BLAST.

Twelve Hundred Pounds of Explosive Let Off.

Meriden, March 25.—At 3 o'clock this afternoon the largest blast that has ever been made since J. S. Lane & Son started their quarries here was set off. Fourteen twenty foot holes had been drilled for the big blast and from 6,000 to 8,000 cubic yards of rock were displaced at a small estimate. The blast was under the direct supervision of Superintendent C. W. Chappell, and was a big success. About 1,200 pounds of dynamite were used in the blast.

Commending the new Curative Lubricant,

Salva-cea

(TRADE MARK.)

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., January 2d, 1895.

"Last Fall I was taken with a severe cold—"the severest, I think, that I have ever had. It "began in the head but quickly went to the "throat and chest, causing a tightness and an "oppression such as I had never before felt. It "was accompanied by a violent cough. I tried "several remedies without relief. The oppression "continued without abatement and I felt the con-"ditions were alarmingly favorable for something "much more serious than a cold.

"Having found no relief, one morning I "thought I would try Salva-cea. I had used it "for cuts and bruises with great success but not "for any such purpose as this. I spread a quan-"tity on a piece of flannel and placed it on my "chest. It is no exaggeration to say that before "night, I might almost say before noon, the op-"pression and tightness were entirely gone, and "the fear of any more serious complications had "passed. No one could have been more surprised "than I was at the suddenness and completeness "of the relief."

CATARRH AND COLDS.

The month of March, accompanied by raw and chilly weather, is one of the most trying during the year. Shaking off the yoke of Winter and forcing Spring upon us, it causes changes in the atmosphere of which we cannot be careful enough. Despite all precautions many of us are taken unawares and must rid ourselves of the so-called ordinary cold before the same settles on our lungs and causes bronchial troubles.
