Notice.

In the matter of the estate of David Milnes, deceased.

In the Probate Court of Boise county, Idaho Territory.

ELIZA MILNES, THE EXECUTRIX OF THE estate of David Milnes, deceased, having, on the 23d day of October, A. D. 1878, duly presented to this Probate Court a petition in due form, verified by her oath, praying for an order of sale of all the real estate and personal property of said deceased for the purposes therein set forth, it is therefore ordered by the Judge of said Court that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased appear before the said Probate Court on Saturday, the 23d day of November, A. D. 1878, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Court room of said Probate Court in Idaho City, County of Boise, I. T., to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said Executrix to sell all the real estate and personal property of the said deceased at public or private sale, and that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks in the "Idaho Semi-Weekly World," a newspaper printed and published in Idaho City, Boise county, and Territory of Idaho.

Paul Before Nero.

Nero, with his thick neck, full round chin, and cruel lips, had lost already the beauty of his early youth. His curling hair was bound by a wreath of myrtle leaves, and his whole expression, as he presided on the judgment seat, was that of a man driven nearly out of his mind with prosperity and boundless power.

Before him stood Paul of Tarsus, worn with long watchings and waitings for trial, although he had received every indulgence which Roman law could permit. On his wrists were the marks of the chains which he had worn for two years, the scars which must have hurt so much whilst they were being made. There were also scars about him of the fearful scourges in which he gloried; and there were traces of perils by sea and by land, which do not leave a man as they find him.

There he stood with undaunted self-possession, facing the Emperor, as he had faced many a lesser ruler. He had longed to see Cæsar, and now he had his wish!

He was at last face to face with the man who had murdered his mother, destroyed his first wife and adopted brother, and whose heart was full of every imaginable wickedness. He was face to face with a man whose blood-stained mind was ever bent on praise, and who so far forgot his dignity that, in spite of the tears of his servant and counsellors, he publicly performed on the stage as a musician and as a charioteer in the circus. It was impossible even for the most devoted adherent to the Roman law to feel the least respect for this emperor; and the awful attribute which was given to him of "power equal to the gods" was incapable of raising him in the minds of his subjects.

Gloomy Thoughts and Gloomy Weather.

Lancet.

Dull, depressing, dingy days produced spiriting reflections and gloomy thoughts, and small wonder when we remember that the mind is not only a motive, but a receptive organ, and that all the impressions it receives from without reach it through the media of senses which are directly dependent on the conditions of light and atmosphere for their action, and therefore immediately influenced by the surrounding conditions. It is a common sense inference that if the impressions without reach the mind through imperfectly acting organs of sense, and those impressions themselves are set in a minor æsthetic key of color, sound and general qualities, the mind must be what is called "moody." It is not the habit of even sensible people to make sufficient allowance for this rationale of dullness and subjective weakness. Some persons are more dependent on external circumstances and conditions for their energy—or the stimulus that converts potential into kinetic force—than others; but all feel the influence of the world without, and to this influence the sick and the weak are especially responsive. Hence the varying temperaments of mind changing with the weather, the outlook and the wind.

A CHICAGO paper says that "a young lady should never stretch her feet out in company." This habit must have caused a great deal of trouble in Chicago.

BIRDS are not noted for courage, but many of them die game.

A Real Ship of the Desert.

Visalia (Cal.) Delta.

A report comes from the Sierra Nevada mountains of the discovery of the timbers of a stranded vessel, resembling those of a Chinese Junk, high up in the mountains, between Mineral King and the headwaters of King's river. The sound portions of the timber resemble camphor wood, and it is said retains a faint smell. The fastenings are of copper; the rigging, &c., are of course all gone. A number of bones, supposed to be human, were also found in the vicinity, and upon the adjacent slopes there is abundant evidence of the previous occupation of the waters in the shape of shells, as well as the occasional finding of petrified fish. That this valley has at one time been an inland sea is admitted by geologists, but that these waters were navigated by Celestial seamen one or two thousand years ago has never been claimed, even by the Chinese themselves. But these same people do claim to have been the original discoverers of this country, and this find seems to give color to the claim. It has also been claimed by them that vessels of theirs have been wrecked on this coast, and that portions of the crew have returned to China; but that the wreck itself should be located, and that this location should prove to be in Tulare county, is surely an interesting fact, inviting the inspection of the curious and the solution of the scientific.

A YOUNG man went into a barber shop the other day and demanded a shave. The tonsorial artist submerged his customer's countenance in a bed of lather, and then went down to the window, sat down and began reading a newspaper. Fifteen minutes passed by.

"Here," demanded the impatient man in the big chair, "why ain't you shaving me? What in thunder are you doing?"

"Waiting for the beard to grow," calmly spoke the barber, not looking up from his paper.

Then a white faced unshaven youth rose up and leaned over the wash basin, while a cautious barber arose and went hastily into the street.

Gambling Women.

Forney's Progress.

At first the women of France were obliged to keep their habits a secret, but during the reigns of Louis XIV and XV they became less timid, and the wives of great men engaged in the deepest play at their own houses. "Such women," says La Brugiere, "makes men chaste;" they have nothing of the sex but garments. I have myself seen women at the gambling tables in Europe; one, who was young, handsome and elegantly attired, would be so absorbed in the play that her face had become rigid and the eyes fixed, and we were told that there she sat, day after day, not even excepting the Sabbath.

Two darkies were vaunting their courage. "I isn't 'feared o' nothin', I isn't," said one. "Den, Sam, I reckon you isn't 'feared to loan me a dollah?" "No, Julius, I isn't 'feared to loan you a dollah, but I does hate to part wid an ole fren' forebber."

TRADITION says that the devil parts his hoof in the middle. That's the reason, probably, that he lets the mule do all his kicking.—[Rochester Express.
