THE MERRY PICNIC DAYS.

O! the picnic days are near when the pretty girls so dear

Will be tripping to the woodlands loaded down with pie and cake,

And will scream when'er an ant down a fair back takes a jaunt,

And go into sweet hysterics when they see a little snake.

In the shadow of the trees they will loil in graceful ease,

Or with reckless impropriety the growing saplings climb,

And, with tan on face and neck, looking each like rustic wreck,

They will wander home at eve and say they had a lovely time.

Be there lovers in the lot they will seek a quiet spot,

Where the birdies voice the joy with which their youthful souls expand,

And, reclining on the grass, will the blissful moments pass

Saying sweet non compos mentis things of sugar-coated brand,

And they'll passionately say that forever and for aye

They could live on love and kisses and be happy with their lot,

Yet when lunch time rolls around be the first upon the ground,

And the first to hit the sandwiches a gastronomic swat!

Yes, the picnic days are near, gladdest season of the year,

When the shirtwaist and the rose will simultaneously bloom,

When the medium weight wraps and the semi-winter traps

Will be buried for the season in a dark, moth-bally tomb.

Rustic breezes in their freaks will be kissing peachy cheeks,

And will toy with home-grown tresses and with artificial hair,

And the woodticks and the fleas and the dreadful bumblebees

Will into the rustic pleasure-seekers throw full many a scare.

Vice-President Fairbanks has had a cigar named in his honor. It must be of the Long Tom shape and guaranteed to afford a cool smoke.

The old maids of Shelbyville, Ind., call each other "unclaimed blessings." Wonder what they call the old bachelors who seek not to be thus blest?

The sweet June bride
In blushing pride
Now stands before the altar,
While solemnly
The dominie

Adjusts the nuptial halter,
Then friends of he
And friends of she,
With faces sadly solemn,
Embrace the bride,
While teardrops glide
Adown her spinal column.

A Georgia man has been sentenced to the chain gang for six months for whipping his boy for playing base ball on Sunday. The mitigating circumstances which secured for him such light punishment are not given.

Jerome has sent one of his star witnesses to where he will be able to find him when the Thaw case is again called up for trial.

The trouble with broken steel rails is said to be "intermolecular vibratory deterioration." This, however, will not soften the grief of relatives of victims.

The severe cold from which Secretary Taft has been suffering is in the head; not the feet.
