WILLIAMSBURG'S BIG BLAZE.

Nearly $300,000 Lost and 800 Men Thrown Out of Work.

Three Horses Burned Alive and Fifty Families Driven Into the Street.

The big blaze in Williamsburg that illumined the east side of the city during the early hours of this morning, destroyed two entire blocks.

The Hecla Iron Works, occupying nearly a whole block, were totally destroyed, and the fire also swept away the cooperage plant of Brennan & Colligan, burned three horses to death, drove fifty families into the street, frantic with fear, and caused considerable damage to buildings in the neighborhood.

The fire broke out in the pattern room of the Hecla Iron Works, located on Berry street, between North Tenth and North Eleventh streets. It is supposed to have originated from an overheated stove.

Watchman Hoening was on duty last night, but was winding the clocks at 11.25 o'clock, when Policeman Pinkerton of the Bedford Avenue Station saw smoke issuing from a window in the second story of the four-story building that forms the main structure.

He turned in an alarm at once, but before Engine 13 arrived five minutes afterwards the whole pattern-room was ablaze.

The floors of the building were of yellow pine and the fire spread with great rapidity. The strong wind blowing from the west fanned the flames until the fire was soon at a white heat.

Fifteen minutes after the fire was discovered it was seen that there was no hope for the Hecla Works. Chief Perry sent out three alarms in quick succession, as the adjoining buildings were of wood and the great blazing sparks sailed over them in an alarming manner.

By this time the foundry of Tuttle & Bailey, which was in the rear of the Hecla Works, was also in a blaze.

Then the large sparks set fire to the roof of Brennan & Colligan's cooperage works on Driggs street, three blocks away, and at 1.45 this building was a mass of flame.

The combustible character of the stock made a very hot fire so that it was impossible to rescue the three horses stabled there. They were roasted alive.

The building was two stories in height, and extended from North Tenth to North Eleventh streets on Driggs.

The varnish-works of Davis & Co. in the rear were soon in flames, too, but the firemen confined this fire to the rear. The office and main stock room were saved.

The tenants of the apartment-houses between the two fires became wild with fear. Smoke filled their rooms, and it was with difficulty that a panic was averted.

The box factory of T. S. Nugent was damaged by sparks, as were the works of Vernon & Co., blank-book manufacturers.

Several houses on North Tenth street, opposite the Hecla Works, were badly scorched.

The Hecla Works employed about six hundred men, Tuttle & Bailey 150 and Brennan & Colligan fifty men.

The Hecla works were owned by Paulson & Egge. Their loss is about $200,000. Tuttle & Bailey were damaged about $75,000, Brennan & Colligan $20,000 and Davis & Co. $1,500.

The fire was not fully extinguished until 10 o'clock this morning.

James Smith, watchman for T. S. Nugent, was nearly scared to death when the fire broke out. He lost his keys and could not get out of the building. He was released by Policemen Brennen and Conroy.

SHOT HIMSELF DEAD IN BED.

Frederick C. Carnaghan, Medical Student, Tired of Life.

It became known in Kingsbridge to-day that Frederick C. Carnaghan, a young medical student who lived with his mother and brother in a pretty cottage next door to the Rev. Mr. Thompson's house at Boston and Bailey avenues, committed suicide at his home last night.

The young man's relatives say they could assign no cause for the suicide, unless it was that the young man was suffering from an abscess in his neck.

The family are well to do, and the neighbors speak of the deceased as a refined young man of bright intellect.

About 9 o'clock last night Frederick, after dining with his mother and his brother, Mr. Charles Carnaghan, went to his room and, after partially undressing, got into bed.

Then he pulled the coverings up around himself and fired a bullet through his heart from a Colt's revolver. The shot was heard downstairs, and when some one went up to learn the cause Mr. Carnaghan was found lying in bed dead.

The police have the revolver with which the fatal shot was fired, at the station-house this morning. It looks as if it had not recently been purchased and has a fancy pearl handle.

M'GLORY SHOWS HIS HAND.

It's Armory Hall's Boss Who Wants the Fourteenth Street License.

Pastor McEwen Tells How Billy Pleaded for "Another Show."

Billy McGlory, of Hester street dance-hall fame, is still at work trying to establish himself as the keeper of a public resort with McGlory accompaniments on Fourteenth street.

THE EVENING WORLD of Jan. 22 told of the interest taken in the change of proprietorship of the Hotel Irving, at Irving place and Fourteenth street by the former proprietor of Armory Hall, and of the charges that the irrepressible William was also seeking a license for the place at 237 East Fourteenth street under the name of Anna McGlory.

Further information of McGlory's movements was obtained to-day by an EVENING WORLD reporter, in an interview with Rev. Henry T. McEwen, of 238 East Thirteenth street, who is pastor of the Fourteenth Street Presbyterian Church, and who, with many property-owners and residents of the neighborhood, is waging a vigorous fight against the granting of a license to the notorious Billy's place.

The house at 237 East Fourteenth street is a five-story brown-stone affair, formerly used as a residence. It is in a respectable neighborhood and nearly opposite the entrance to the lecture room of Rev. Mr. McEwen's church, which fronts on Second avenue.

"A man named Wagner formerly ran a quiet, respectable restaurant there," said Mr. McEwen this morning, "but last June he feathered out and opened a regular beer garden, with awnings and lanterns in front and a complete garden with trees and tables in the back yard.

"Here people gathered, and drank and sang songs until late at night, to the great annoyance of the neighbors. We finally complained to the Board of Excise, and Wagner was forced to move.

"He said before going that no one could make a living in the place without catering to this disreputable class, so when we heard that Billy McGlory was going to reopen the place we determined to prevent his getting a license.

"McGlory called on me twice, but did not see me until Tuesday, Jan. 27, when he made no bones of acknowledging that he owned the house at 237, and said he wanted another show. and he told me that he was trying to get a license for his tenant, Francesco Annagoni, who, he said, formerly kept a restaurant at 213 East Thirteenth street, and was a very nice tenant.

"'What do you mean by a nice tenant,' I asked him. 'He has already sold wine without a license and kept his place open until 3 o'clock in the morning; that we can prove.'"

"Billy tried in every way to induce me to withdraw my opposition," continued Mr. McEwen, "but I refused absolutely.

"'Is it because I am Billy McGlory that you are fighting me?' he asked. 'No,' I replied, 'not especially, but I am opposed to any one opening a public resort there.'

"McGlory protested that Annagoni intended to run a first-class hotel there, but I told him I didn't believe it, for a first-class hotel, according to Wagner's own testimony, wouldn't pay."

Mr. McEwen will appear before the Excise Board Saturday morning to oppose the granting of the license. He is backed by many Fifteenth street residents who are decidedly up in arms and have retained Lawyer Robert Goelet, of 6 Wall street, to push their case. McGlory has retained Lawyer Charles Steckler.

Affidavits have already been submitted from two persons who say they have bought wine at the restaurant. And another is to the effect that the woman who bears the name of Anna McGlory is William McGlory's wife.

Weird Story of Adventure Told by a Philadelphia Boy.

[SPECIAL TO THE EVENING WORLD.]

NEWARK, N. J., Feb. 4.—A strange story of alleged kidnapping, which, if true, rivals that of Charlie Ross, is told to the police of this city by seventeen-year-old Samuel De Wolf, who says his home is at 2063 Sergeant street, Philadelphia.

The police are not satisfied that his story is true and have wired to the Quaker City for information.

The boy's story is that he got a note signed by a friend, calling him to a house in Philadelphia, where he was seized by five men, who threatened him with death if he made an outcry.

He was blindfolded and taken on several journeys by train, finally turning up at Waverly, N. J., where he was put on another train.

He says he made his escape from the men just as the train reached Newark.

GEN. WOODFORD WON'T TELL.

He Objects to Say How Fayerweather's Codicil Was Executed.

Heirs Watching the Contest for the Old Merchant's $7,000,000.

A host of well-known lawyers sat in front of Surrogate Ransom when the hearing in the contest over the late Daniel B. Fayerweather's $7,000,000 estate was resumed this morning.

The executors of the will were represented by Arnoux, Ritch & Woodford, John E. Parsons and Henry Stoddard, together with a number of lawyers representing the institutions which are the beneficiaries under Mr. Fayerweather's will.

Frederic R. Coudert, D. J. Holden and Daniel G. Rollins appeared for the contestants.

Those present were Lucy J. Beardsley, of Bridgeport, Conn., and Mary W. Achten and Miss Drury, two nieces of the testator, and daughters of William Fayerweather, of Muscatine, Ia.

Mrs. Lucy Fayerweather, the widow of the dead millionaire, was unable to attend the proceedings, as she is very old and feeble, but a number of her relatives and friends of the family were present.

A large portion of the audience which filled the court-room was composed of women, and the expectation that before the contest is over there will be some sensational developments seems likely to be gratified.

Gen. Stewart L. Woodford, who drew the last codicil to Mr. Fayerweather's will, testified that he had called the attention of Mr. Fayerweather at the time of drawing the first codicil, to which he was a witness, to the fact that there was a provision of law which might invalidate the will.

Gen. Woodford went on to say that before the engrossing of the will proper the only specimens of Mr. Fayerweather's handwriting he had seen was a paper written in ink directing the raising of Mrs. Fayerweather's income from $12,000 to $15,000.

"You did not see the will executed?"

"I don't think I saw it again till the day the first codicil was executed."

This was on Dec. 15, 1884.

On the morning of that day he saw a copy of the will on his office desk.

"Was that the first time, you had heard that a codicil was contemplated?"

"I had heard nothing of any such intention before that day as I remember."

"When was the codicil executed?"

"About noon, I think."

"Did you not know that Mr. Fayerweather was coming that day to execute a codicil?"

"I don't think I did. The first intimation I had of it was when a messenger came to me and asked me into Mr. Ritch's room. Mr. Fayerweather was there. I then learned that a codicil was to be executed, and the other witnesses were called in."

"Why were you called as a witness?"

"Simply because I happened to be there and it was convenient, I suppose."

"Was the codicil read aloud?"

"I don't think it was, but I am not certain."

Gen. Woodford admitted that it was a very important paper, because it gave the entire residuary state absolutely to Justus L. Bulkley and Thomas G. Ritch, but could not remember that it had been read in the presence of the testator.

"Had you previously given any study to the matter as to how the statute of 1860 could be successfully evaded?" asked Mr. Rollins.

"No sir, I had not," replied the witness emphatically.

"Didn't you know that Mr. Fayerweather had an intention to give largely to colleges?"

"I know that Mr. Fayerweather's will shows that he intended to be liberal with colleges."

"Didn't you have conversations with him about this matter?"

Gen. Woodford objected seriously to answering this question, on the ground that he would be violating his professional duty in betraying the confidence of the dead man.

"Mr. Fayerweather is in his grave," he said, "and I must positively decline to say anything about any conversations I had with him."

"Well, when you found that this first codicil dumped the whole of the residuary estate into the laps of Mr. Bulkley and Mr. Ritch were you not somewhat surprised?"

Gen. Woodford said he was not, although he knew it meant a million dollars or more. He thought at that time the estate of Mr. Fayerweather was between two and a half and three millions.

"What sort of a man was Mr. Fayerweather then?"

"He was an active business man, wiry and strong, and a man of great will power."

"Do you believe that it was Mr. Fayerweather's intention to give his entire residuary estate to Mr. Bulkley and Mr. Ritch unconditionally for their own use and benefit?"

"So far as I know it was."

"Was either Mr. Ritch or Mr. Bulkley a relative of Mr. Fayerweather?"

"I believe not."

Gen. Woodford thought that there was some sort of "discretionary power" given to the executors in the will or codicil, and Mr. Rollins jumped at this point with a flood of questions, in a way that seemed to rattle the witness seriously.

A recess was then taken.

NOONAN WANTS A NEW TRIAL.

Convicted of a Burglary to Which Another Man Confesses.

Augustus Mettler Yet Declares That He Robbed the Salewitz Till.

Lawyer Ambrose H. Purdy made a motion before Recorder Smyth, in Part II., General Sessions, this morning, for a new trial for James Noonan, convicted on Jan. 22 last of burglarizing Salewitz's grocery store, at 4 Jefferson street, on the night of Jan. 11 preceding.

When Noonan was about to be sentenced he still protested that he was innocent, and a lodging-house frequenter, known as Gus Metler, "the Dude," suddenly appeared in court and insisted that he and not Noonan had committed the burglary.

The Recorder declined to commit Mettler, however, believing that it was a scheme to free Noonan, and Mettler has since been at large, turning up frequently in Lawyer Purdy's office, and always insisting that he, and not Noonan, was the burglar.

Noonan was brought up from the Tombs for sentence this morning, when Lawyer Purdy made his motion.

Mettler was also in court, and it was principally upon his affidavit that Lawyer Purdy relied in his argument for a new trial.

Mettler, in his affidavit, swears that his name is Augustus; that he lives at 41 Bowery, and was never convicted of crime. He swears that on the night of the burglary he was in Salewitz's store and rifled the money drawer of $2.45 and some collar buttons; that he found the store door open, and in closing it when he went out he accidentally slammed it, attracting the attention of Policeman Sullivan, who chased him into a door next to August Blint's saloon at 5 Norfolk street.

He stood there, he says, while the officer called Noonan out of the saloon and arrested him.

He also swore that Sullivan told him to get out of town, after he had confessed the burglary, and that he was discharged at Essex Market Court because he said he was drunk and didn't know what he was saying; which remark, he also claims, was made at Officer Sullivan's suggestion.

Mr. Purdy also submitted the affidavits of Isaac Cohen, who says he heard Sullivan tell Mettler to get out of town, and of Blint, the saloon-keeper, who swears that Noonan was one of six men who were in his place when Sullivan called for "the man who came in last."

Deputy Assistant Attorney McIntyre put in the affidavits of Policemen Sullivan and Collins, who say that Mettler confessed to them that he was drunk when he "confessed" the burglary.

Mr. McIntyre argued that Mettler had confessed that he robbed the store till, whereas it was the bureau in the Salewitzes's bedroom that was rifled, and that the whole thing was a job to free Noonan, put up in Blint's saloon, which both Noonan and Mettler frequented and which Mr. McIntyre argued was a resort for thieves and crooks.

Recorder Smyth suggested that perhaps Mettler was in the store before Noonan was, and had both men stand up so he could look at them.

The men are totally unlike, except in height. Noonan has spare features, light hair and sandy mustache. Mettler has black hair, full, smooth face, big head and square jaws.

The Recorder took the papers and reserved his decision.

HARD LUCK ON A HONEYMOON.

A Philadelphia Couple Spend a Night in a Police Station.

[SPECIAL TO THE EVENING WORLD.]

ELIZABETH, N. J., Feb. 4.—John Stewart and wife, of 4,154 Ludow street, Philadelphia, newly married, came on their honeymoon to visit a friend named Dillon residing on Spring street here.

They were robbed on the train between here and Plainfield of all their money, and on arriving here were told by their friends that there was no room for them.

The unlucky couple had to spend the night in the police station, but Chief Tooney telegraphed to the bride's mother for funds, and this morning received a letter with the price of two railroad tickets inclosed.

47 FAMILIES IN A PANIC.

Fire in Two Six-Story Tenements in Eldridge Street.

The big six-story tenements 45 and 47 Eldridge street, which are jointly occupied by forty-seven families, were the scene early this morning of a fire panic.

Ten minutes before five o'clock flames were discovered in Morris Goldman's grocery in the basement of 247. The fire ate it way rapidly up the air shaft between the two buildings and filled the hall and apartments with smoke.

Mrs. Schneider, housekeeper of 47, who lives on the first floor, was the first to be awakened. It was with great difficulty that she aroused the other members of her family, and they hurried out into the hall.

A baker named Black, who has a bakeshop under the grocery store, discovered the flames about the same time that the housekeeper was awakened and he kicked at the doors and shouted fire.

Some one ran to the quarters of an engine company just around the corner on Canal street and gave an alarm. In the meantime a panic was in progress in both houses.

The tenants, who had been awakened by the cries of fire and the rattling of the engine, left their rooms half clad and soon the halls were filled with men and women carrying children in their arms.

The fire was burning fiercely in the grocery, and the smoke came up the air-shaft in thick, black clouds, filling the rooms and halls. It was almost suffocating.

Some of the people living in the lower floors fled to the street with their half-naked children The morning was cold and the children suffered much.

The tenants above the third story made for the roof. Men and women madly rushed up the stairs and in a few minutes the upper halls were filled with a surging struggling mass of humanity all endeavoring to reach the roof.

Women and children's screams could be heard as they were pushed and jammed together in the confusion.

A woman in No. 47 who was sick and helpless had to be carried out. She was taken to a neighbor's house.

The panic stricken people finally crossed over the roof of the burning tenement to the adjoining houses where they were safe.

Morris Goldman, the grocer, occupied rooms back of the store with his family. The fire started between the store and his living apartments. When aroused by Baker Black he found the flames almost on top of him and his apartment so full of smoke that it was impossible to see.

He quickly awakened his wife, and taking their children crawled out of the back door into the yard and got into the adjoining house. They had a narrow escape, as they were nearly suffocated.

The firemen succeeded in cutting off the progress of the flames at the second story, and soon had them under control. The damage was about $1,000.

DREW'S STARTLING TALE.

The Missing Danbury Manufacturer's Story Doubted.

The startling adventures of Daniel J. Drew, the Danbury hat manufacturer who has been missing since early last December, as related in despatches this morning, are regarded by those who knew Drew in this city as extremely improbable.

It is said that Drew has written a letter to a friend in Danbury from Michigan City, Ind., where he claims he is now working as a coal shoveller, in which he says that, after cashing a check for $250 at the People's Bank, in Canal street, in this city, Dec. 6, he was knocked down, robbed, put in a freight car, and arrived in Houston, Tex., five days afterwards nearly dead.

According to Drew's alleged story the robbery occurred on Canal street in broad daylight. When he recovered consciousness, he says, he found himself in the box car. His money was gone and his clothes had been changed.

Ever since he recovered from the effects of his injuries he has been trying to work his way back home, and he has now reached Michigan City.

Drew was last seen in this city at the store of of L. Corn & Co., hat dealers, at 127 Greene street, on Dec. 6, last.

A member of the firm told an EVENING WORLD reporter this morning that Drew was only known to them a few days before he came to their store.

They had purchased a consignment of fur hats from him on samples he had sent them from Danbury, and he had told them not to send the check, which amounted to $250, in payment for the goods, as he would come to town and get it himself.

He called there about 1 o'clock on Dec. 6 and received the check, and that was the last that was seen of him. He was a young man, about twenty-four years old, and had a black mustache and a short beard.

Two or three days afterwards a woman, who said she was his wife, came to the store and made inquiries about him. She seemed to be about ten years older than Drew, and said that they had been married about four years. She was sent to Police Headquarters, where she reported the disappearance of her husband, and a general alarm was sent out.

Not long after this one of the Danbury papers contained an account of the disappearance of Drew, in which it was stated that everybody in Danbury was surprised to hear that Drew was married, for none of his friends had known him as a married man.

ZERO WEATHER TO-MORROW.

Sergt. Dunn Predicts the Coldest Wave of the Season.

"This cold wave," said Sergeant Dunn this morning, "came on suddenly owing to the rainstorm in the lake region vanishing rapidly. The wave was behind and came on in a hurry. We shall have the coldest weather this season to-morrow morning, when the thermometer will register between zero and 10 degrees above.

"The strong west wind that has been blowing from twenty to thirty miles an hour will continue to blow with the same force."

The greatest fall in temperature during the last twelve hours was between 8 and 9 o'clock this morning, when it dropped from 18 to 14 degrees, the coldest point. At noon the mercury stood at 17 degrees. The flurry of snow during the morning was owing to the rapid fall in temperature.

WHO IS THE SUICIDE?

One Visitor to the Astor House Thought It Was His Brother.

The fair-haired young man who severed his jugular vein in the Astor House last night so completely concealed all traces of his identity that none of the many callers to see the body to-day at Undertaker Duffy's place, 82 Greenwich street, recognized it.

A young man, who wouldn't give his name, called at the Astor House at noon to-day and thought it might have been his brother, who has been missing for three weeks.

He started for Duffy's shop to view the body but was afraid the sight might upset him and he reconsidered his intention and toiled into a Broadway cafe instead.

Fred Evans was the name under which the suicide engaged his room at the Astor. He is 5 feet 8 inches in height, with a soft, downy mustache and an aristocratic face.
