HOW HE BROKE THE NEWS

A Heartrending Narrative Given to the World in a Western Paper.

(From the Lincoln Journal.)

You say that I'm pale and flustered, and shivering in my shoes; I'll be hanged if you wouldn't shiver if you had to "break the news." I suppose you have heard how Quimby is stretched on a bunk down there, with a pint or more of his own blue blood mixed up with his auburn hair? Well, they made me a joint committee to go to his house and tell his wife all about the scrimmage and what to her man befell. I went to the house up yonder, not matched on the job, you bet, and my classic and blue-veined forehead was oathed in a quart of sweat. The woman was in the kitchen, a-singing a plaintive song, but she dried up when she saw me, for she knew there was something wrong. Then I coughed and I hemmed and stammered, and "Madam," said I, "be brave; your husband is now a living"—— Oh, Lord! what a shriek she gave! And she walked up and down a-moaning and wringing her furrowed hands, and her hair fell down like seaweed adrift by the ocean sands. "Oh, heaven," she cried, "my husband! They've taken my love from me," and the way that she reeled and staggered was a sight for a man to see: "So brave, so kind, so noble! So loving, so grand and strong, and now must I wait his coming in vain all the dark day long? And his children will wait in sorrow and never again in glee troop down in the misty twilight and cluster at out his knee." And so she went on a-raving; her screams for a block were heard, and I, like a graven image, stood there without saying a word. It seemed like my tongue was frozen or glued to my pearly teeth, and hardly a breath came upward from the paralyzed lungs beneath. But I braced up all of a sudden, and "Madam," said I, again. "I'm sorry—I'm deuced sorry—to have caused you this needless pain. Let up on your frenzied screaming; you don't need to weep and wail; your old man ain't dead by a long shot; he's only locked up in jail." She glared at me for a minute—for a minute or two—and then she said, "So the darned old loafer is down there in jail again?" Then she picked up a tub and smashed it all over my princely head, and I saw she was getting ready to paint the whole landscape red. So I skipped through the gate and mo-ved so fast that I tore my shoes, and they won't make me a committee in the future to break the news.

Improved His Opportunity.

(From the Brooklyn Republican.)

"Well, good night, Miss A.," said a young man the other evening to a Dwightville girl whom he was visiting. "I think it's better for me to go. I feel certain that if I stay two minutes longer I shall be indiscreet enough to kiss you."

"Well, good night, Mr. F.," replied the girl. "Oh, by the way," she added, "I want to show you my sachet bag before you go. It will only take a couple of minutes."

It is only necessary to state that the young man in question is the possessor of a bright intellect, and he quickly calculated the situation, and we can tell of such that the girl was left.

A Mythological Phantasy.

(From Puck.)

Bright Boy (gazing at the Venus of Milo)—Mamma, was Venus just like that?

Mamma—Yes, I think she must have been.

Bright Boy—And I suppose Jupiter punished her in that way for telling the other gods how her baby.
