Pickpockets.

Some months ago, while going down Broadway in an omnibus, as I was looking at the people on the sidewalk, I felt a hand very softly and gently making its way behind me, evidently progressing toward the pockets in the skirts of my coat. Recollecting that there was nothing but a handkerchief in one pocket and a pair of gloves in the other, I knew that I could not lose much, and therefore sat still to enjoy this new sensation. The hand was moved very gently and steadily along, and had very nearly reached my pocket, when I turned to study the "artist." He was a man about forty years of age, plainly and neatly dressed, and looked like a very respectable citizen.

The instant I began to turn toward him his hand was swiftly but quietly withdrawn, and when I faced him he was looking gravely at something on the sidewalk. As I continued to study him he turned his head, and we had a good, "square" look at one another for a moment, without a word being said by either. He then pulled the strap and left the stage, to seek some other sphere of action.

A young friend told the writer recently that his mother was sitting not long ago in an omnibus, when she became aware that the "gentleman" on her right was feeling for her pocket under her cloak. For a moment a cold shiver passed through her, but, as it was broad daylight, and as there were evidently many persons in the omnibus to whom she might apply for protection, she took courage and recollecting that in the dress she wore her pocket had, much to her previous annoyance, been sewed on the wrong side of the skirt, concluded to sit still and await the course of events. After having been sufficiently entertained by the vain effort of her neighbor to find the pocket, she turned to him and said quietly, "My pocket is on the other side, sir." The man immediately jumped up, pulled the strap, and disappeared with most amusing rapidity, the contemptuous coolness of the lady having been too much for his artistic nerves.

The passengers on one of our crowded ferry-boats were much amused one day at seeing a gentleman very deftly pick his friend's pocket of his pocket book and transfer it to his own. They were still more amused at seeing a third "gentleman" take the pocket book more deftly from the amateur and disappear in the crowd. The denouement soon came. Number two asked number one to let him see his pocket book, and, when his friend could not find it, proceeded with a smile to restore it to him. His smile, however, was changed to a look of intense surprise, which was very much enjoyed by the bystanders, for they expected that "gentleman" number three would soon appear and unravel to his friends this amusing mystery. But, alas! Number three never came back. He was, it seems a true "artist," who had coolly robbed the amateur as publicly as the latter robbed his friend. In the hurry and confusion of landing number three made his escape, so the amateur was obliged to compensate his friend for the contents of his pocket book, probably resolving, at the same time, to eschew ever after any such practical jokes.

While the writer was one day conversing in a car with a friend on this subject, he told the following story: The best joke I know about pickpockets is what happened to a gentleman named A—, who at the time was president of one of our New York banks. I had occasion to go to Philadelphia to attend to some business in which A— was interested, and in the cars met a friend, an old gentleman and his grown up son.

When we reached Philadelphia, the old gentleman declined getting into the coach of the hotel to which we were going, preferring to go more cheaply by the horse cars. We got to the hotel before him, and when he joined us he said he had had his pocket picked on the cars. Mr. A— had been talking with a friend about something else, but catching a word or two of our conversation he asked me about it, and when I told him what had happened he said, "Oh! I can never have any sympathy with a man who has had his pocket picked. Why, when I was getting on the cars at New York, a fellow reached across me very roughly, pretending that he wanted to reach the knob of the door, I looked at him, and knew in a moment that he was a pickpocket; so I just put my hand on my breast pocket, where I carried my pocket book and papers, and kept it there, while I looked at him so as to let him see that I knew who he was and what he was after.

We then went on conversing about the business that had brought us to Philadelphia. After discussing it for some time Mr. A— wished to show us some memoranda he had made, and put his hand into his breast pocket to get his pocket book, in which they were. I saw him start, and asked what was the matter, when he exclaimed, with a countenance expressing the most intense astonishment, "Why, my pocket-book is gone."

It was very clear that the man that reached across him had taken his pocket book, and that he had been ever since feeling the other papers in his breast pocket, and been thus deluded with the idea that his pocket book was safe. It was a very serious business for him, for he had brought on about $30,000 worth of notes of Philadelphia merchants to negotiate for his bank, and he had besides five or six hundred dollars in bills. He asked me what he should do, when I advised him to telegraph immediately to New York, and put an advertisement in the papers offering about $2,000 for the return of the papers. He replied, "Oh! no; $500 will do." "Very well," said I, "try it." He did try it, and received a note stating that $2,000 were required. He tried to negotiate for less, but was finally compelled to pay the price named. Since then I have occasionally amused myself by quoting to him his own remark: "Oh! I can have no sympathy with a man who has had his pocket picked." —N. Y. Times.

BETTER THAN GOUGH.—Some time since a little incident occurred at Cape Girardeau, an account of which, it is hoped, Mr. Gough will incorporate in his lectures; it will point a discourse and add effect to the moral. A character, noted somewhat for loafing around bar-rooms, was sitting in his usual place of resort, with several compatriots, about a card table, killing time with the pasteboards. Suddenly his wife entered the room, bearing a large covered dish, which she deposited on the table with the remark: "Presuming, husband, that you were too busy to come home to dinner, I have brought yours to you," and then departed. The husband invited his companions to share his meal, and removed the lid from the dish, revealing no smoking roast, but instead a slip of paper, only this and nothing more, on which was written, "I hope you will enjoy your dinner; it is of the same kind your family has at home."

What the Lecturers will talk About.

Already arrangements for the next lecture campaign are in a forward state, and it is possible to give the names and themes of quite a number of the speakers:

Mr. Jenkins, of London, known as the author of "Gyna's Baby," is to visit the States and lecture on "The England of To-day," and the "English Satirists."

John B. Gough's new lecture is entitled "Now and Then."

Mrs. Livermore will give her views on "Women's Husbands," which seems to be an important appendage, or perhaps a necessary evil to many of the suffrage class.

The Rev. W. H. H. Murray will tell what he knows about "The Perfect Horse," which is a good deal.

Ex-President Hill, of Harvard College, will descant on the "Straits of Magellan" and "Juan Fernandez."

Mrs. Lemowes has prepared new lectures on Siamese life.

Dr. Hayes, the Arctic explorer, announces "Far Northern Life and Scenery," and "History and Progress of Maritime Discovery."

Thomas Fitch, of Nevada, will give the experiences of "A Sagebrusher in Vienna."

James Parton will take a hand—purely as a lecturer—in "Our Scandalous Politics," which may, perhaps, introduce some allusion to the salary grab.

Dr. Dio Lewis has two important themes "Our girls" and "Our Eyes."

Dr. John Lord has a number of lectures on Representative men.

Senator Sumner will lecture, if his health permits, and Wendell Phillips will also doubtless be heard from. Senator Boutwell is also named as a lecturer next season.

Mrs. Julia Ward Howe's themes are "Paris" and "Santo Domingo." Col. T. W. Higginson's are "London" and "Thinking Animals."

Bishop Gilbert Haven will lecture on "Mexico." Prof. John Fiske on the "Darwinian Theory," and Kate Reignolds on "Charles Reade."

SABBATH PIETY.—There is a mystery about this effect of the weather on piety. Sabbath heat seems hotter; Sabbath rain wetter than that of any other day. For the same measure of heat or cold or rain on a week day, will not keep one from his usual business. We need a Sabbath almanac, calculated for our churches, that will show by its weather scale when it will be safe for a vigorous Christian to expose himself on the Sabbath to going to the house of God. Such an almanac would enable pastors and superintendents of Sabbath Schools, to know when they could depend on in church, Sabbath School and prayer meeting. I have recently been examining microscopic views of the different snow flakes, a hundred or so of them. I would suggest to our curious savants, an examination of Sabbath snow, to see if it has a peculiarly sharp and injurious crystal.

Cleansing Blankets.

"The Housewife" in "To-Day" discourses in this wise:

"It is quite as important to have the blankets on our beds clean as to have the sheets pure and white. The foul exhalation which they absorb in time makes the bed anything but sweet.

The Boston Journal of Chemistry gives the following method of cleansing blankets: Put two large tablespoonfuls of borax and a pint of soft soap into a tub of cold water. When dissolved, put in a pair of blankets, and let them remain over night. Next day rub and draw them out, and rinse thoroughly, in two waters, and hang to dry. Do not wring them. But this is not the only domestic use to which borax may be put. Says the same journal: Borax is the best cockroach exterminator yet discovered.

This troublesome insect has a peculiar aversion to it, and will never return where it has once been scattered. As the salt is perfectly harmless to human beings it is much to be preferred for this purpose to the poisonous substances commonly used. Borax is also valuable for laundry use. To about ten gallons of boiling water add a handful of borax, and you need use only the ordinary allowance of soap. For laces, cambrics, etc., use an extra quality of this powder. It will not injure the texture of the cloth in the least. For cleansing the hair nothing is better than a solution of borax water. Wash afterward with pure water if it leaves the hair too stiff. Borax dissolved in water is also an excellent dentrifice, or tooth-wash.

HOW TO ENAMEL.—To enamel the inside of copper cooking vessels, in which acid fruit and vegetables are cooked, and thus prevent the formation of the so-called "verdigris," the following method is recommended: Twelve parts of unburnt gypsum, and one part borax, are finely powdered, intimately mixed, and fused in a crucible. The fused mass is then poured out, and after cooling, is rubbed up to a paste with water. The copper vessel is to be coated inside with this preparation, applied by means of a brush, and the vessel placed in a moderately warm place, so that the coating may dry uniformly, after which it is subjected to a gradually increasing heat, till at length the preparation fuses. On cooling, the vessel is found to be protected internally by a white opaque enamel, adhering very firmly to the copper, not chipping off by ordinary knocking and rubbing, and impervious to vegetable acids.

LINOLEUM.—This new article is manufactured of linseed oil, by oxidizing it until it is solidified into a resinous substance, as we frequently find it when it has been exposed to the atmosphere. It is stated that in this state it is combined with resinous gums and other ingredients, whereupon it assumes the appearance and most of the properties of India rubber. Like India rubber, it can be dissolved into a cement, and used in the manufacture of the material for water-proof clothing. It can be used as varnish for the protection of iron or wood, or for coating ships' bottoms. It is as good as a common cement, having properties similar to marine glue made from India rubber and shellac. It is easily vulcanized by exposure to heat, and by this means become as hard as the hardest wood, and capable of the finest polish. The great variety of uses to which it can be applied in this form will at once suggest themselves to the reader. The manufacture of linoleum has thus far been made to produce floor cloth, for which it has proved itself well adapted. Combined with ground cork, it is spread on a stout canvass, the back of which is afterward water-proofed with oxidized oil. The fabric is then printed by means of blocks in the ordinary way. The floor cloth thus produced is pliable, noiseless to walk upon, washes well, preserves its color, and rolls up like an ordinary carpet. It is very durable, and its component parts will not decompose by heat or exposure to the sun or air, as will India rubber.

"PLAYED OUT."—This is a slang phrase, but how significant! Here is a young man who was once the pride of his mother and the hope of his father, now a "played out" profligate. Here is a politician who was once respectable and respected, now a corrupt, bespotted, "played out" vagabond. Here is a poet, artist and musician, one who once stood at the head of a large circle, and was popular with all who knew him; he became vain of his gifts and ventured on a course of irregular life, which soon led to dissipation, and finally, to his present condition, a "played out" genius. There are many "played out" boys. They were all started in life, having well formed bodies and brains, and inheriting conditions favorable to make them men. But by bad habits they have ruined themselves, and are now "burned out," used up, dilapidated, "played out."

Nervous and Sick Headache and Neuralgia.

In almost every instance these diseases are produced by derangement of the digestive organs and liver disease. Rarely indeed, would any one suffer from these diseases if they kept their bowels regular and digestion good by proper attention to the liver which is the great governor of these functions. This can be done by taking Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, with small daily doses of his Pleasant Purgative Pellets; they re-establish the action of the liver, thereby purifying and enriching the blood, and effectually removing the cause of these diseases.
