

and estimated cost are needed for many reasons. If in connection with the new boulevard there could be a park on the military reservation, think what it would be to the city, and with those plans and the estimated cost prepared by a known expert, carried to the war department and congress, the needed appropriation for the work could be obtained. Then the plans agreed upon would cause many a man who has realty near where the improvements would be made, to change his idea of the nature of the structure he would himself create.

The whole city is interested and we believe the sentiment of the whole city is to have only the very best that can be obtained.

A Man And A Chemist

PROFESSOR Chandler, the great chemist, who for forty-six years has been professor of chemistry in Columbia university, will retire next June. He is about the best loved man in the university. He never goes to a lecture that the students do not cheer him to the echo. He thinks that chemistry has a great future yet and that the United States will lead. He has been appointed on very many important commissions. He was the head of the Metropolitan Board of Health seven years prior to 1873. He has been on commissions to investigate the subject of the American hog products, to investigate the preservation of timber, to investigate the manufacture of glucose, the denaturalization of alcohol, and the waterproofing of fractional currency and bank notes.

We think it is a great pity that Prof. Chandler did not come west forty years ago and devote his attention to the reducing of ores. Great strides have been made since then, wonderful improvements made in machinery and in chemistry, but our belief is that the work as yet is but half done; that when the world is entirely enlightened it will be possible with cheap material, to save all the great machinery now used in the reduction of ores, beyond grinding them pretty fine; that then the pulp will be put in boxes or tanks and by some liquid poured over them they will be absolutely disintegrated; the gold and silver and other metals will fall to the bottom and the matrix that held them will be washed away.

But the amount of good work that this Professor Chandler has performed cannot be measured by any human process. He has in his department shown that what Napoleon said was true, that men are nothing, a man is everything.

The new regulations issued during the week by Dr. Samuel G. Paul, city health commissioner, regulating the quarantining of any place where a contagious disease is found, will strike Salt Lakers as a move that should have been made many months ago, though it is no fault of Dr. Paul's that the order has come at this late date.

Stricter quarantine regulations and their absolute enforcement, without fear or favor, will go further towards freeing the city of contagious diseases than almost anything else, and there can be little question of the enforcement of the new rules under the present state of efficiency to which the health department has been brought.

Two Plans for Saving

It is a matter of wisdom and good judgment to deposit money where it will grow by reason of interest additions, as is shown by the following two plans:

One dollar saved each week and, in the old fashioned way, hidden in your home or elsewhere so that it will earn no interest, will amount to $1,040.00 in twenty years.

One dollar saved each week and deposited with this institution where it will earn 4 per cent compound interest, will, at the end of twenty years, amount to $1,614.00, having during this time earned nearly six hundred dollars interest.

Which of these plans do you follow? We welcome deposits from one dollar upwards.
