A Plan Worth Thinking Of.

Would it not be a plan worth thinking of for every lady, at the outset of a note writing career, to choose her own style of paper and to adhere to it as scrupulously as might be convenient through life? Then the fashion might change all it would, it could bring no change to her, no trouble, no uncertainty; she would be always in fashion, being always a law to herself. Her note paper would be as much her own as her eyes or her mouth or her Coleman's Ko-Ko Tulu; it would be a part of her general style, hers as her name is hers, as her crest or coat of arms might be, known and recognized and never to be found fault with, no matter what new notion was to be had at the stationer's.
