ONE DAY IN SEVEN.

The Sabbath Set Apart to Enable the World to Rest From Labor.

MAN SHOULD NOT WORK FOREVER.

How Sunday Should be Observed in Christian Families.

THE SOCIAL MEANING OF THE DAY.

[WRITTEN FOR THE DISPATCH.]

The old law of the Sabbath, I was saying last Sunday, that old commandment numbered fourth among the ten, has passed away in part. So far as concerns the selection of the day on which men ought to rest, the old day has gone out with the old reasons which made it sacred. The Saturday of the Hebrews means no more to us than the Friday of the Mohammedans.

But all that was essential and helpful about that ancient Sabbath, all of it which Christ kept when He lived here, stayed. The central meaning of the fourth commandment was in the word rest. If you will think of it, you will see that in the commandment as it stands, rest is commanded, and nothing beyond that physical rest, the stoppage of work, a day for tired people to get some leisure—that is the whole meaning of this fourth commandment. There is not a mention here, if you will notice, of religion. We are apt to think that there is, on account of the word "holy." But that word, as I said, simply means "separate." Keep this day apart. Six days you work; that is well; now take one day for rest.

The Sabbath, as a matter of fact, was not kept by the Jews as a day in which the chief thought was religion. True, in later times, they had preaching in the synagogues on that day. But quite another thought was uppermost in the Hebrew mind. The Sabbath was the day of rest. Dr. Edersheim, in his life of Christ, has a long and curious appendix upon the "Talmudic Sabbath Law." It is a singular illustration of the abyses of folly into which it is possible for men to fall. The details which are set down for conscientious observance, one hardly knows how to believe that sane men ever invented them. "And yet," says Dr. Edersheim, "in all these wearisome details there is not a single trace of anything spiritual—not a word even to suggest higher thoughts of God's holy day and its observance."

SIMPLY FOR REST.

Because the central purpose was not worship, but rest. And men somehow persuaded themselves that rest, which to most of us is the simplest thing in the world, was a most elaborate affair indeed. They would compel people to rest by violence, if it was necessary. The complicated Sabbath law was like a great, cast-iron rest machine. It raised people as the iron clamp at the photographer's rests our heads.

However, the point which I desire you to notice is that the emphasis was upon rest. God gave a commandment that men should not work forever, but that they should have a little leisure in their lives. It is very beautiful and gracious and loving, the insertion into the midst of the moral law of God of an injunction against excessive work. There were the lightnings and thunderings and strange voices about the peak of Sinai, and below were the frightened Hebrews shaking with fear. And then down comes Moses with the will of God written out so that men may tremblingly read it, and here, just in the midst, God says: "My children, I would not have you work too hard; take a day off once every week, and get a good rest, all of you." To me, this word of fatherly solicitude is very touching.

And what a dreadful thing men made out of it, working out its meaning with such narrow measures that the great, fine, fatherly intention was lost altogether. And what a tragic failure men make to-day in the keeping of it! "Six days shalt thou labor"—and "six hours a day" I wish had been put into the commandment—"but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God. In it thou shalt do no manner of work."

Why, there are thousands of men and women in this Christian world to-day who do not know what rest is; they are slaves in a bondage compared with which Old Egypt was a blessed Paradise. They are ground between the upper and the nether millstone, over-hours on one side and under-pay on the other. There are men and women who and miss them of getting decent food. One day in seven? No; not one day in 700! And in the midst of such a condition of things—did you read the story of the London strike?—in the midst of such a world, over a part of which Satan himself seems to be ruler, the priest reads the commandment of rest, and the people answer, "Lord, have mercy on us, and incline our hearts to keep this law." Have mercy on us for what? The sooner we find that out the better. The sooner we learn the meaning of the commandment of rest in this world of work, the better for all of us.

And yet, on the other hand, "no manner of work"—shall we hold to that literally? That is a very comprehensive phase. I am afraid that if we were to insist upon it strictly it would defeat for a good many of us the whole purpose of the commandment. There were certain Rabbis who held that when a man waked up on the morning of the Sabbath, he should continue in the attitude in which he found himself, and stir neither hand nor foot till the sun went down. To call this rest is like making a wilderness and calling it peace. No; the best rest is oftenest found in work, in change of work.

If we are to make "no manner of work" a phrase to be interpreted by grammar and to be translated into rubrics, we will all find ourselves Sabbath-breakers, as I said at the beginning. But Christ did not so interpret it. Common sense is wiser than all the grammars. "No manner of work"—that means no work which interferes with the purpose of the commandment, which is rest. "The Sabbath," Christ said, "was made for man." God established it for our benefit. "Not man for the Sabbath."

But the Christian Sabbath means more than the Hebrew Sabbath ever meant. The Christian Church has taken this fourth commandment, as Christ took others of the commandments, and added to it, put a new and higher meaning into it. The old law concerned the body, the new law concerns the body and the soul, too. The central thought of the old Sabbath was rest; the central thought of the new Sabbath is

REST AND RELIGION.

The old was negative; it commanded rest from work. The new is positive; it commands rest for worship. Both were days of commemoration, but the events which the Christian Sabbath brings to mind are far more distinctively religious, far more closely connected with God and the soul. Accordingly, the new day has a new name. It is never called the Sabbath. That day throughout the Bible, means Saturday, always. It is called "the Lord's day."

Once every week there comes into every well ordered Christian life a day which deserves to bear that name. The hurry, the rush, the noise of the week, is shut out. It is a quiet day.

The books, the magazines, the papers which are read every other day, are read sparingly to-day. Sunday is made a different day, even mentally, from the other days. The emphasis is put upon the higher side of life, upon religion. That is read to-day which lifts us up, and makes us think thoughts which are high and ennobling and worth while. And nothing else. There is the religious paper, there is the religious book; remembering that all which elevates men is religious. There is the Bible.

In the morning and in the evening, the church bells ring. And that means worship in the house of God. That means the necessity of a choice between the refreshing of the body and the refreshing of the soul, between the lower and the higher. Thou shalt not, the old commandment says, "and thy cattle," too. For there is one kind of Sunday which a horse can keep as well as a man. But "I was in the spirit on the Lord's day," said St. John, setting us an example. And that lifts us above the animals. The church bells ring, and men make this most significant of choices, whether they will keep the rest day like an ox or like a man.

The afternoon is sacred to the family. "It came to pass 'that Jesus' went into the house of one of the chief Pharisees to eat bread on the Sabbath day." This gentleman had invited Christ to take dinner with him, on Sunday, as we would say to-day. And that invitation Christ accepted. I do not know what He would say to some of our Sunday visiting. I am sure that He would have disapproved of a good deal of it. Nevertheless, He has set His seal here to

of the day. Especially in the family, the Lord's day ought to be the weekly festival of household happiness. "This is the day which the Lord hath made; let us rejoice and be glad in it." Make it a bright day. Let everybody have a happy face on this day. Let it be the feast of gladness. Let the public flower gardens be open in the summer time. Let the railroads take people out into the country under God's clear sky. Let us get all the genuine pleasure that we can into this day for everybody.

For the little children it is well, as I have said before, to have special toys and games, the best of all, reserved for Sunday. For the older children there are the mother's Bible stories. Celebrate the day with music. Keep that good old custom which gathered the family together to sing the beautiful old hymns.

It is "the Lord's day!" May I do this? May I do that? May I go here or there? May I behave myself thus or so? The name answers all questions. Whatever is consistent and fitting to do upon a day which is set apart and consecrated to the blessed memory of Him whose helpful life we read in the Gospels—do that, you cannot go astray.

But of all this in the fourth commandment there is not a word. We have added this, waiting for no commandment, seeking no texts to justify us, content with the commandment of Christian reason, to the rest of the old day we have added religion.

Such a Sunday, such a restful and religious day, ought to be kept in every household. It is not kept in every household; the ambitions, the hurries, the frivolities, the bargains of the week crowd in upon it; the transitory is suffered to obscure the eternal. A generation is growing up which is not being taught at home the happiness and help which this day holds. And the wise shake their heads over the fact, and see in it a menace both to soul and body, both to church and State. And it does not need any unusual wisdom to see how Christian civilization and the Christian Sunday are bound up together.

We, at least, can do our own part. We, at least, in all our homes, can keep the Lord's day in the Lord's way.

ONE HUNDRED YEARS

Since the Founding of the Catholic Hierarchy in America.

DEDICATION OF THE UNIVERSITY.

The Law Trouble in Connection With the Foreign Faculty.

WILL START WITH FIFTY STUDENTS

[CORRESPONDENCE OF THE DISPATCH.]

WASHINGTON, November 2.—In the dedication of the new Catholic University on the 13th of the present month, Catholic education in America will receive a mighty impetus. In 1790, the first year of the establishment of the Catholic Hierarchy in this country, there was but one Catholic institution, the historic Georgetown College, formed by the Jesuit Fathers in 1788 and the alma mater of so many distinguished men in America. To-day there are 650 colleges and academies and 27 ecclesiastical schools in the United States.

Thus the opening of the second century of the Catholic Hierarchy in America will be marked by the founding of an American University which it is the hope of the originators will tend to elevate ecclesiastical learning in this country to a higher plane. The faculty of the university will be composed of men of the highest religious and secular learning. The decision of the Treasury Department as to whether the foreign professors can be admitted to this country under the provisions of the contract labor law has not yet been given, but Bishop Keane, of Baltimore, the rector of the new university, is confident that the law can be so interpreted as to admit of their entrance.

ONE LITTLE CLOUD.

Should an adverse opinion be rendered it will go rather hard with the university authorities, as the majority of the members of the faculty are from abroad. Dr. Schroeder, who will expound dogmatic theology for the edification of the embryo priests is from the Seminary of Cologne. Dr. Boquillion, professor of moral philosophy, and Prof. Hyvenat, who will have charge of Scriptural instruction, are from Belgium. The Rev. Dr. Pohle, who will deliver lectures on philosophy, is from the University of Fulda. Father Hogan, professor of sacred eloquence and liturgy, was formerly of St. Sulpice, Paris, but has latterly been teaching in an American seminary, and so will not come under the ban of the law. The extreme penalty for violation of the contract labor law is $1,000 for each offense. Father Hogan, assisted by the Sulpician Fathers, will have charge of the discipline of the students and the domestic affairs of the university.

The university will open with some 50 students selected by the various bishops of the United States. Where a student is not able to bear the expense himself attendant upon his course in the university, he will be supported by a fund set apart by the diocese from which he comes.

Upon gently sloping ground adjoining the Soldiers' Home, and overlooking the park and cemetery of that institution, stands the massive stone structure known as the divinity building, the only one of the university group yet constructed. Standing on the avenue leading to the Soldiers' Home, through the masses of richly colored autumnal foliage, one catches glimpses of the heavy walls, broken here and there by gables and chimneys, standing out in strong relief against the sky. Situated as it is, in one of the most picturesque portions of the city, a finer site for the university building could scarce have been chosen. Pleasant drives lead to it from the four points of the compass, while it will be easy of access to the immense crowds of the faithful who will be present at the solemn ceremonies attendant upon the dedicatory exercises by way of an electric railway which will be shortly completed. It can also be reached by the Metropolitan Branch Railroad, which lies a short distance to the east.

A MASSIVE STRUCTURE.

The main or central portion of the divinity building is five stories in height, while the flanking wings are but four stories. It is built of a bluish stone found in the district, relieved by trimmings of Ohio sand stone. The exterior of the building presents no elaborate ornamentation, but the severe lines of the Romanesque architecture give it a strikingly solid and massive appearance. Upon the pinnacles of the building are placed figures of ancient philosophers, and over the arches of the windows are placed smaller figures. Above the main entrance, which is in the center of the building, in a niche in the wall, is a marble statue of the Savior, the work of a Munich artist.

At this entrance there is a stone porch in the pediment of which is set a slab with a Latin inscription commemorative of Miss Mary Gwendolen Caldwell's magnificent gift. It was mainly through the efforts and wealth of Miss Caldwell that the structure was erected. As a mark of his appreciation the Pope invested Miss Caldwell with the Order of the Golden Rose, a decoration conferred but once before upon an American, Mrs. General Sherman, some years ago, was honored with this order. The entrance to the chapel is upheld by a number of small pillars with handsomely carved capitals. On one side of the chapel entrance stands a large statue of Mary, the Mother of Christ, the gift of a Parisian lady.

Upon each side of the main entrance are the receiving parlors. In one of these parlors will be placed a handsome oil painting of Pope Leo XIII., his gift to the new university. This picture was presented to the Pope during the Golden Jubilee, and it was intended that it should hang in the halls of the Vatican at Rome. Upon either side of this painting will be hung counterfeit presentments of Washington and Archbishop Carroll, the first Bishop of Baltimore, under whose administration the Catholic hierarchy in America was established.

THE PATRON SAINT.

From the Eternal City comes another object of deep interest to all Catholics. Upon the Pincian Hill the Roman government has placed busts of many of her distinguished sons, one of these, being that of St. Thomas Aquinas, the patron saint of the university. During his recent sojourn in Rome, Bishop Keane became well known to the members of the English colony through his lectures and sermons before them. Upon the announcement being made of his choice as rector of the new university, the English colonists had a copy of this statue made and presented to the Bishop as a mark of their loving remembrance. Bishop Keane has been informed that Mr. V. Loubat, a Frenchman, now residing in New York, will present to the university a colossal statue of the present Pope. This statue will be of the finest Carara marble, and will be the work of Italy's leading sculptor.

The first floor of the building will contain, besides the parlors, the lecture room, chapel, refectory or dining room and kitchens. In the chapel are 13 marble altars executed in Caen, France, the grand altar standing at the eastern end, with the smaller ones upon either side. From Munich comes the stained glass windows of the chapel. A resident of the city has presented the university with a $2,000 organ for chapel use. Leading to the second floor is a broad and spacious staircase, a splendid specimen of the wood carver's art. On the second and third floors will be the rooms of the professors and students. Upon the fifth floor will be the recreation rooms, one being a finely fitted up billiard room, while a well-equipped gymnasium will prevent the development of the gray matter in the skulls of the young theologians at the expense of their physical powers.

It is the intention of the university authorities to erect six additional buildings, the sites of which have been already marked out. These buildings will be known as the Hall of Science, with its laboratories, the library and the university chapel. An observatory, provided with all the modern appliances for the study of astronomy, will be erected upon an elevation in the rear of the Hall of Science. The other buildings will be used as residences by the members of the faculty.
