NORTHERN PAPERS.

Our friends would greatly oblige us by sending any Northern papers they may chance to get in their possession to this office. The public will thus receive the news at the earliest moment.

The Yankee General Pope.

It is the nature of all men to love distinction.—The good seek it by doing good to their country and their species. The bad are willing to obtain it, as they are willing to obtain money, at all hazards. The former desire pure fame. The latter are willing to put up with notoriety.

The subject of this notice was born of respectable parentage. He is the son, we believe, of the late Worden Pope, of Louisville, and is related to the highly respectable family of the same name in Virginia. He was educated at West Point, where he graduated about twenty years ago. Boys always give some evidence of what they are destined to be, while still at school. A good boy—is boy of whom his schoolmates are fond—is almost sure to turn out a good man, and the reverse. "The boy," it has been truly said, "is father to the man."—Pope was distinguished at the academy as the most shameless liar and the most incorrigible braggart that had ever darkened the doors of that institution.—His lies were of the most offensive character. They were all about himself and his own exploits. He was the Bobadil of the school, with all the insolence, all the swagger, all the lying, and a double share of the cowardice, attached to that respectable character. He had every disposition in the world to be a tyrant, and would have been had it not been for his timidity. He graduated by some means or other, and became notorious at all the posts where he was stationed. To his school boy accomplishments of lying and bullying, he now added the graver character of a finished swindler. Few were the tradesmen within reach of the several posts at which he was stationed who had not good reason to acknowledge his superior genius in this last-named avocation.—That trait which we have mentioned as having been suppressed by fear at the Academy, began now to appear in full vigor. He durst not attempt to play the tyrant at school because he was among his equals, and they might call him to account.—But the soldier had no defence against him, and upon him he wreaked all the malice of a vindictive heart. Other men become cruel by long indulgence of the passions, Robespierre was not naturally bad. He might even have lived and died a harmless and respectable man, had he never tasted of power, which seems to be to the human heart what the taste of blood is to the tiger. Pope was cruel by nature. He was not led on gradually, step by step. He plunged at once into the very vortex of crime. His proceedings in Missouri will challenge a comparison with the most infernal record ever bequeathed by the licensed murderer to the abhorrence of mankind. And yet, it was his first step in blood—the first opportunity he had ever had to feast his eyes upon slaughter and regale his ears with the cries of human agony.

How Pope blustered himself into the notice of the Administration, which gave him the command of the expedition for sinking artesian wells through the desert, we do not know; but we do know, and everybody knows, the issue of that expedition. It was like its commander, a signal failure. We were going to say it was a water-haul; but it was not exactly that, for he did not get a drop of water.—How he got his present command is better understood. Lincoln wanted a tiger to suck blood, and he got him. He wanted a man to gain victories on paper, and Pope had just proved himself to be that man. His report to Halleck, that he had captured 15,000 of Beauregard's army, and 20,000 stand of arms, when he had not taken a man or a musket, stands alone in the history of lying.—It left him without a rival in that respectable art. He distanced Munchausen and all other professors. It was "Eclipse first, and the rest nowhere." Accordingly the caustic observation of the London Times, Secretary Stanton has no need of armies to gain victories. He can annihilate whole hosts, and capture hundreds of guns, by a single dash of his pen. Where, then, is so easy to gain victories on paper? Pope was the right man, and he put him in the right place. No man so thoroughly understands the art of gaining victories on paper, not even McClellan, or Stanton himself. Of this he has already given a striking proof. A band of his horsemen came to Beaver Dam Depot—where there was no force—and burnt it. They "skedaddled" as soon as they heard that Stuart was after them. Pope announced a great victory, in terms sufficiently swelling for Austerlitz or Jena. The Bobadil of the old army, he proclaims that he has seen nothing of his enemies but their backs. We wonder if the gentleman who cowhided him for offering an indignity to a lady was standing with his back to him when he inflicted chastisement?

The Duke of Brunswick, when he invaded France, issued a proclamation in which he threatened to hang or shoot every Frenchman who took up arms in defence of his country. He has received the execration of the world in return from that day to this. In a few weeks he was flying before the very people he threatened to hang. Pope threatens to hang every Virginian who may be found defending his native soil. This is certainly a very convenient way of conquering a country. It saves the trouble of fighting, and fighting Pope does not like. His satellite, with the German name, improves upon his invention. Doubtless he is a son of the executioner in his native place. He has a fondness for pie art, very much resembling that of Mr. Dennis, in the novel of Barnaby Rudge. He has caught five victims, and is fattening them for the slaughter. Pope has cause to tremble for his laurels. He is in a fair way to lose his claim to be called the most execrable scoundrel in North America. He seems to have some suspicion of this, and hence his proclamation announcing his intention to withdraw all protection from property and persons in the country his soldiers overrun. This proclamation is without parallel. It is an open invitation to plunder. It offers a premium for murder—the premium of impunity. We yet hope to see this execrable villain and his lieutenant expiate their crimes on the gallows, in pursuance of the President's proclamation. The fault we find with that document is that it is not sufficiently comprehensive. Why should the mongrel crew who march under the banners of Lincoln be exempted from punishment?

GUERRILLA PAROLES TO BE DISREGARDED.—Gen. Boyle, commanding in Kentucky, recently sent the following dispatch to H. R. Wirtz, medical director:

LOUISVILLE, July 25.

SIR: The paroles of Johnson and other guerrillas are not to be regarded. The parole of Johnson or any few rebels is of no effect.

Take care of sick soldiers as such, and let them return to their regiments when able.

Obituary.

Died, at the Chimborazo Hospital, of typhoid fever, on the 29th of July, EDWARD H. PETTUS, in the 19th year of his age.

He was a kind, gentle, and amiable young man, and was held in high esteem by all who knew him. At the first call for volunteers he was one to enlist, and, bidding adieu to the loved ones at home, he started, like the most of us, with a heavy heart, but looking forward to brighter days that were hidden in the mysterious future. He was a member of Neblett's Lunenburg Artillery, of which he remained a faithful member for thirteen months, until death came and took him from us. His death has left a gap which will not be readily filled in his company nor domestic circle. During his whole thirteen months of soldiering he only had the pleasure of a seven days' furlough, of which it took four to go and return, to visit the loved ones at home. Though short, he was punctual in returning, and murmured not, for he knew he had a work to do. POOR NED has left us, and well do I remember the last time I gazed upon him. I being sick, he came to see me; after remaining a short time, bidding me farewell, said he would call again in a few days. Ah! little did he then think that he would never meet again. He has like many a brave soldier has died, far from home, but not from friends. His brother remained with him until his death, and used all the means in his power to restore his younger brother to health, but all in vain. He also has another noble-hearted brother, who has been under the heroic Jackson for more than fourteen months, and has been in nearly all the battles that were fought in Western Virginia. He has no doubt won many laurels, for which he will be long remembered, and we pray that he will be spared to return safely home, and to relate the sad scenes that he has encountered. NED has left us, but his memory still lives. No more shall we enjoy his interesting conversation around our camp fires, or have our hearts gladdened by his presence. As a soldier, messmate, and friend, he was kind and affectionate, and a noble-hearted youth; and while we, with his many friends, do mourn, we trust that our loss is his gain. Dear EDWARD, farewell.

THOMAS.

EXTRACTS FROM THE PRESS.

From the Atlanta (Ga.) Intelligencer:

"We recognize, however, in the few introductory pages of 'The First Year of the War' that we have hastily perused, truth set forth by this brilliant writer with brevity and force, and with that graceful diction which has won the admiration of all who are familiar with his writings. * * * It supplies what is much needed—a history of the first year of the war, the causes that produced it, and the battles fought in it, from the beginning down to the defeat of McClellan's army near Richmond."

From the Atlanta (Ga.) Southern Confederacy:

"'The First Year of the War' is from the large and enterprising publishing house of West & Johnston, Richmond, and written by Edward A. Pollard, author of 'Black Diamonds,' &c., one of the best informed men upon the political history of this country, and a most forcible and vigorous writer. * * * It is a most readable and instructive book, gotten up with surprising accuracy, and will repay a careful perusal."

From the Charleston Mercury:

"From the teeming press of West & Johnston, publishers, Richmond, we have in a volume of nearly four hundred pages, a history of "The First Year of the War." The book itself seems all that the author claims it to be. The style, though not laboured, is pleasant and vigorous. * * * In the presentation of the facts themselves, we have nowhere detected any tendency towards unfairness of statement. The book may be regarded as a faithful reflex of the views of the calmer portion of the people of the South, in respect to the events of the war at the time of their occurrence."

From the Richmond Enquirer:

"This book has been read by many in camp.—The author's style is fascinating; that portion of his book which recounts the origin and causes of the war is lucid and satisfactory."

From the Richmond Dispatch:

"Mr. Pollard is already well known to the public as the author of 'Black Diamonds,' etc. The present work is written in the peculiarly animated and racy style of the author, and will command an extensive sale. Mr. P. has enjoyed unusual facilities for collecting information, and has made the best use of it. The book is written with candor and impartiality, and as far as we can judge, strictly truthful and very interesting."

From the Richmond Examiner:

"It is the most elaborate and valuable literary contribution that has yet been made to the interests of the South; that it will not only entice, but repay, the curiosity of all readers."

From the Richmond Whig:

"The well known ability and diligence of Mr. Pollard are guarantees of the value and merit of his book. We anticipate much gratification from its perusal, which we will notice at length. Messrs. West & Johnston, the publishers, deserve much credit for their enterprise."

From the Richmond Christian Observer:

"The History of the First Year of the War for Southern Independence,' prepared by so sprightly and vigorous a writer as Mr. Pollard, makes a volume that will be read with eager interest by tens of thousands. It gives an intelligent, connected sketch of the past eventful year, prefaced by a clear account of some of the causes of the war.—* The book is an instructive, entertaining and reliable account of the great events of the Revolution of '61, and should be very largely read.

Will be published on Wednesday, August 13th,
