Moonlight Work in Gardens.

A new type of garden laborer, known as the "moonlighter," has appeared in the suburban country districts of England, owing to the shortage of general laborers. The moonlighter is a worker who is employed all day, but who is willing to earn a little extra money by working during the moonlight nights in the gardens and allotments. His is the only sort of labor that the suburbanites can now employ in the digging and sowing of the vegetable plot which every suburban householder regards as an essential part of his household.
