BEAUTIFUL NORMAL GIRLS.

Two Hundred and Sixty-five of Them Graduate To-Day.

Thousands Attend the Commencement Exercises at the College.

The twenty-third annual commencement exercises of the Normal College took place this morning in the College chapel, Sixty-eighth street and Fourth avenue. There was an attendance of about four thousand. The exercises elicited frequent applause.

The salutatorian was Miss Henrietta Raschen. The valedictory was delivered by Miss Lina Hall, who received 98.5-10 per cent., the highest grade obtained by any student in the history of the college.

The feature of the day was the conferring of the degree of Bachelor of Arts upon fifty of the 265 graduates. This degree had never before been granted by the Normal College.

The following are the prizes granted this morning:

Kane gold medal for Physiology—Harriet Raschen. Honorable mention, Kate L. Hartt and Gretchen Silverberg.

Kelly silver medal for methods of teaching—Sadie N. Levy. Honorable mention—Harriet Raschen and Mary D. Knox.

Kelly bronze medal for methods of teaching—Katherine L. Hartt. Honorable mention—Alice Lyons and Emma Sylvester.

Attendance gold medal for proficiency in German—Harriet Raschen. Honorable mention—Emma Meier and Minnie Cutting.

Intermediate silver medal for Greatest Progress in German—Cornelia Engelsman. Honorable mention—Flora Levy and Rosie Pforzheimer and Alice Lynch.

French, first prize—Elizabeth P. Lazarus. Honorable mention—Miriam Cerf, Kate L. Hartt and Sadie N. Levy.

Second Prize—Gretchen Silverberg. Honorable Mention—Emma Sylvester and Margaret Black.

Commissioner Guggenheimer's gold watch for English Literature—Kate L. Hartt. Honorable Mention—Clara Blum and Sadie N. Levy.

Commissioner Hubbell's prize of books for the greatest general progress during the year—Jennie Wertz.

The Hunt gold medal for Latin—Clara Blum. Honorable mention—Kate L. Hartt and Harriet Raschen.

Mrs. Clara Williams's second prize, Clara Blum.

The Board of Trustees conferred the following scholarships:

For manual training, upon Sadie Levy, Gretchen Silberberg, Rosa Halbe, Anna Bradley, Gertrude Carlson, Rachel Levy, Camilla G. Pell, Hilda Korn, Daisy R. Appell, Hattie Blatt, Clara Miller, Addie La Chate.

For work in the Kindergarten Department, upon Agnes T. Ross, Mary Dean Knox, Katharine T. Halpin, Ethel Clark, Annie Krause, Elizabeth Egan.

Class A. Cl. 5 came in for the highest honors, thirty-eight out of its fifty members getting an average of more than 90 per cent.

The work of the graduating class in mathematics was equal to that of the senior classes of Harvard and Yale, and, although no single scholar obtained as high a percentage as that of the highest record in other of these latter colleges, the general average of the Normal students was considerably better.

The large hall was tastefully decorated with the national and college colors, the latter being lavender and white.

The fair students occupied seats in front of the platform, whereon President Hunter sat with the rest of the Faculty and the Commissioners of the Board of Education.

It was a meliorable sight. Hundreds of beautiful young graduates, dressed in white and cream-colored dresses of Swiss silk, mull, crepe de chine and embroidery, with the accompaniment of purple sweet peas.

It looked like a scene from some fairy legend, the illusion being enhanced whenever the college Glee Club sang.

The exercises coincided with the singing of the National anthem, "America."

The visitors for the most part constituted the relatives and friends of the graduates, and whenever one of these recognized a face among the immense throng she would flush up with conscious pride and look doubly charming.

NEARLY BORED TO DEATH.

Talk on the Affairs of the Day Not Appreciated by Her.

"Why don't you talk to young ladies as though you regarded them as rational creatures, instead of treating them as though they cared for nothing but silly compliments or trivial personalities?" asked my dear old aunt as I stood near her at Mrs. Meanwell's tea. "Really, it is an absolute insult to a clever girl's intelligence to prattle the sort of stuff I heard you pouring forth just now. Why don't you converse about something? Why don't you"—

"Why?"

"Yes, why?"

"Would you really like to know, most sensible and benevolent of relatives? You shall be enlightened, if you will place yourself in such a position as to overhear the sweet voice of yonder vision of tailor-made perfection seated near the window. By the way, will she do?"

"The bright-looking girl in gray from whom Mrs. Meanwell has just torn young Fally?"

"The same—Miss Newdollar, I think."

"Excellently, indeed; I should say you could make no better choice."

"The change of base was speedily effected, says George Kyle in Kate Field's Washington, and with mantle seemingly engrossed in a fine collection of autographs, but a yard or two away, I leaned more or less gracefully above the fran form of my victim.

"I came across such an odd theory in an English magazine this morning. The author finds a close connection between sunspots and financial crises, and traces a direct correspondence between the number of spots and the number of failures in London, each reaching a maximum every ten years."

"How funny. Excuse me, but who is that tall, military looking man with the decoration in his button-hole? I am sure you can tell me; you know everybody."

"That is Col. Pompinickie, of the Austrian Legation. And speaking of Austria, it is said that thousands of persons in the southern districts will starve because of the failure of the rye crop."

"Poor things! how can they eat such horrid sour stuff? I should think they would rather get along on beef and potatoes and such things than to starve. Who is that horrid little dowdy thing talking to Mrs. Meanwell?"

"That is Miss Skylark, who has spent her life nursing the sick and wounded in military hospitals."

"How nice of her. But why does she wear her hair in that awfully unbecoming knob? Isn't it close in these rooms?"

"Quite so. Have you heard that Dr. McDonald claims to have discovered the insanity microbe, and intends inoculating young ladies and gentlemen for imbecility?"

"I beg pardon. What were you saying? Oh, yes, something about animalcula! I saw some once in a drop of water at a stereopticon entertainment. Horrid things! I refused to drink any for ever so long after. Won't you be a dear, kind fellow and introduce the colonel to me? That swirl Dr. Bigwitz is boring him dreadfully, I feel certain, and he's been glancing toward me ever since you've been talking. I am sure he is just dying to make my acquaintance, and besides I know that he is suffering. Dr. Bigwitz nearly inked me to death once about science and things. Will you? Oh, you always are so obliging."

"Well, auntie, do you know 'why' now?" I whispered, as I helped the dear old lady into her coupe. There was an expression of sympathy and commiseration in her kindly gray eyes which was an ample reply.

"But tell me, what did Miss Newdollar say to the Colonel when I left them together?"

"You are not over-sensitive?"

"Not the least in the world."

"Well, she breathed a deep sigh, a sigh of relief, and said: "Oh, colonel, you have saved me from a dreadful fate. Do you know that young man, whom I have never inquired, must have sworn a dreadful oath to bore me into an untimely grave!"

WITCHCRAFT IN PENNSYLVANIA.

Still Believed In by Colonists in the State Interior.

Where colonies of immigrants have remained isolated, retaining the use of their own language, the influence of witchcraft is more easily traced, says Dr. Buckley in the Century.

The interior of Pennsylvania affords better illustrations of this and on a larger scale than any other State. It has been but two or three years since suit was brought by a man against his mother in one of the counties of Pennsylvania to recover damages for a dog which he charged her with having killed by witchcraft; and he not only brought suit, but obtained judgment from a Justice of the Peace.

Various witnesses testified as to their experiences in witchcraft, and only one said that he had never had a friend or relative who was bewitched.
