MURILLO'S MULATTO.

How the Little Slave Became a Celebrated Painter.

The famous Spanish painter, Murillo, had a little mulatto boy named Sebastian, the son of Gomez, a negro slave. The little fellow was employed in the workroom in which the pupils of the master carried on their studies, and had to grind the colors, clean the palettes and wait on the youths.

MURILLO'S LITTLE SLAVE BOY.

One morning one of the students found part of his work completed which he had left unfinished the previous day, and the amazement of the young men increased when day after day they found additions, and sometimes corrections, made on their canvases. They accused each other of tampering with their work in their absence, but this was denied, and matters reached a climax when one of them, who had begun a picture of the Descent from the Cross, on going to his work in the morning found the head of the Madonna painted in it. How it got there they could not tell, and it was better than they could have painted. So they told the master and showed him the head. He was surprised at its excellence, and thinking Sebastian must know about it, as he slept in the room every night, he told the boy that unless he found out the unknown artist by the following morning he should be whipped.

The poor little negro was in an agony of terror, for he himself was the mysterious painter. It appeared that he had a natural genius and great love for art, so had secretly studied and painted on the canvases of the students before they arrived in the morning. Fearing punishment if he was found out he decided to expunge the Madonna's head and never paint any more. When early the next morning he looked at the beautiful face he had not the heart to rub it out, but set to work to finish it instead. So absorbed was he as the time went by that it was only on hearing a rustle behind him that he turned his head and beheld the students, with the master himself, looking on in admiration.

The poor little slave fell on his knees, imploring pardon. But Murillo, kindly raising him up, asked him what reward he should give him for his skill and industry. Sebastian only asked for his father's freedom, which Murillo at once granted, and giving him his own liberty also, received him among his pupils. He soon distinguished himself and became a celebrated painter; but he was better known as Murillo's mulatto than by his proper name of Sebastian Gomez. He died in 1690. His principal paintings may yet be seen at Seville.

Progressive Spelling.

Let an umpire be chosen, equipped with a dictionary for consultation, and a pencil and paper. Let all the rest stand in line, and number one spells the first syllable of any word that occurs to him, but does not mention the word. For instance, the word "constantly" may have occurred to him, so he says c-o-n con. The next person spells the next syllable, thinking perhaps of "consequently." The next in the line may think the word "consecutive," so spells his syllable. As each syllable is spelled and pronounced the umpire writes it down; every one who makes a mistake goes to the foot, the rest moving up.

Every one who completes a word scores one; accounts are kept, and the person who makes five wins the game. In case a word is formed that sounds unusual, consult the dictionary. Avoid proper nouns and slang and keep to the English language.—Home Queen.

A Boy's Composition.

The kokonuts is a native of the tropik. It gros onto trees and is good to eat. Billy Brown's oncle is a vessil kaptain, and one time he fetched Billy a hole lot of kokonuts from West Ingies. Hit tuck us a hole week to eat 'em up. Wot Billy and me wants to no is how doz the milk git inside the kokonut. Does the kokonut gro round the milk or does the milk leke in from the outside, and if so wot fur? Kokonut py is my favorite, but Billy likes kokonut candy best.—Youth's Companion.

Little Tommy Gray.

"THREE INTO ONE WON'T GO."

Little Tommy Gray has a very empty pate,
Dearly loves to play, but he hates his book and slate;
He is puzzled now over what he ought to know,
"Three into one won't go!"
—St. Nicholas.

"B" or No "B."

I really think my sister May
Is stupider than me,
Because she said the other day
There wasn't any "b"
In honeycomb, and spelt it just
"C-double o-m-e!"
Of course she's wrong. I told her so;
There's got to be a "bee"
Somewhere in honeycomb, because
He makes it, don't you see!
—Wide Awake.

Height of Cruelty.

Nervous women seldom receive the sympathy they deserve. While often the pictures of health, they are constantly ailing. To withhold sympathy from these unfortunates is the height of cruelty. They have a weak heart, causing shortness of breath, fluttering, pain in side, weak and hungry spells, and finally swelling of ankles, oppression, choking, smothering and dropsy. Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure is just the thing for them. For their nervousness, headache, weakness, etc., his Restorative Nervine is unequaled. Fine treatise on Heart and Nervous Diseases and marvelous testimonials free. Sold and guaranteed by all druggists.

How a Great Steelyards Suit Ended.

Two Penobscot county farmers had bought an old fashioned pair of steelyards, each paying part of the cost, and both used them for weighing their produce for market. After a time a dispute arose and both claimed to own them. The matter was carried into court. A trial was held before a jury, and the jury disagreed. Then the case, on some technicality, was sent to the law court, and was again sent back for trial. The costs up to this point had reached about $500, about a hundred times the original cost of the steelyards.

When it came up again Judge Peters was the presiding justice. He told the counsel that, if continued, the costs would be increased to such an extent that one or the other of the parties would lose his farm in order to pay, and advised them to enter it "neither party," and divide the cost as it was. After a consultation the parties said that they were willing to do that, and it looked as though the case would be settled.

All at once one of the contestants went over to his counsel in the court room and asked: "But who is going to get the steelyards? I'll be hanged if he shall have them." The other contestant made the same declaration. Then the counsel rose and said the case was just where it was before any talk of settlement had been made. They were willing to stop litigation and divide the cost, but "what could be done with the steelyards?"

"I'll fix that," said Judge Peters. "Let the sheriff of the county take the steelyards at night and go down and throw them into the middle of the river, letting nobody know the exact spot, so they never can be recovered by any one." The contestants agreed to that proposition, each paid his proportionate part of the cost, and the case was dropped.—Lewiston Journal.

An Abused Language.

It is curious to note what vulgarisms creep into the American language, even the language spoken by well educated, not to say cultured, people. Just at present the ear is harrowed by a phrase, or rather a word, much used by our belles who assist afternoon hostesses at that function called a "tea." "My dear," says one girl to another, "I'm invited to pour for Mrs. Commonwealth next Wednesday." "Oh, are you? Well, she asked me to turn, but I had another engagement." Heavens and earth, I thought, what is the meaning of "pour" and "turn?" It was some time before the verbs and their implied noun made a connection in my brain, and then the desire to stand these young women in a corner was so intense I retired to avoid a demonstration.

The century has indeed grown old and lazy where the tongue finds so small a word as "tea" difficult of utterance. To pour tea is about as simple a phrase as can be spoken, and to drop the final word tea is to render it intolerably vulgar. The custom at large afternoon receptions here of having two good looking girls perform this service, generally imposed on servants in well appointed houses in London, is thoroughly American, and so, too, is the abominable fault which has grown out of it.—Boston Herald.

The Knell of a Broken Heart.

In the shops of the C. H. and D. R. R. at Hamilton, O., is a cracked locomotive bell that has a history. It was attached to a locomotive presided over by a strong, manly, handsome engineer, whose great objects of pride and adoration were first his sweetheart and then his faithful engine. He loved them both devotedly, though of course in quite different ways. One day at Hamilton he stood in the cab of the engine, bell rope in hand, ready to move the lever and start the train, when he saw a bridal party approaching.

He glanced at the bride; it was the girl he loved. His heart stopped beating, he gave a groan, and dropped—dead. As he fell with the bell rope in his hand he gave the bell a loud ring that cracked it from top to bottom, and it was found afterward that he had died literally of a broken heart. The bell in the shops at Hamilton is still called "the bell of the broken heart."—St. Louis Republic.

Colors in Window Shades.

Our windows are undergoing a complete metamorphose. Twenty years ago everything was white window shades; then we had a period of dark shades, deep greens, and what folks termed refined colors—drabs and browns. For five years past the fashion became a sort of "go-as-you-please" fashion, with a tendency, perhaps, among the better classes toward ecrus and natural holland tints. Now, however, for the first time we are getting into fine designs in window shades, and the newest things from abroad are in brocade styles and damask figures. Some of the patterns are in pin cords and stripes, with buds and flowers interspersed.—Upholsterer.

Two Ways of Putting It.

Little distinctions will always carry with them a delightful significance, and their non-observance will often be the cause of much ill feeling and unpleasantness—as witness the case of the gentleman that met that fine type of the old school jurist, Judge Conkling, upon one occasion and said somewhat patronizingly: "Oh, you are the father of Roscoe Conkling!" "No!" thundered the grand old fellow, testily, "Roscoe Conkling is my son."—Clothier and Furnisher.

New Waterproof Compositions.

A liquid waterproof composition has been placed on the market for coating articles such as leather, strapping machinery, polished steel, brass and copper, which, it is claimed, will resist damp, heat, cold and acids. The composition is colorless, and does not rub or peel off, being only removable by the application of paraffin or turpentine.—New York Telegram.

Wealth for Future Generations.

In southern Oregon there is a forest 16,000 miles in extent, with an estimated amount of merchantable timber of 400,000,000,000 feet. At ten dollars per thousand feet the proceeds would pay our national debt twice over.—Boston Globe.
