CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED!

DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM For the LUNGS.

Cures Consumption, Colds, Pneumonia, Influenza, Bronchial, Difficulties, Bronchitis, Hoarseness, Asthma, Croup, Whooping Cough, and all Diseases of the Breathing Organs. It soothes and heals the Membrane of the Lungs, inflamed and poisoned by the disease, and prevents the night sweats and the tightness across the chest which accompany it. CONSUMPTION is not an incurable malady. HALL'S BALSAM will cure you, even though professional aid fails.

TRADE S.S.S. MARK

Scrofula of Lungs Relieved.

I am now 49 years old, and have suffered for the last fifteen years with a lung trouble. Several members of the family on my mother's side of the house had died with consumption, and the doctors were all agreed in their opinion that I had consumption also. I had all the distressing symptoms of that terrible disease. I have spent thousands of dollars to arrest the march of this disease. I have employed all of the usual methods, not only in my own case, but in the treatment of other members of my family, but temporary relief was all that I obtained. I was unfit for any manual labor for several years. By chance I came into possession of a pamphlet on "Blood and Skin Disease," from the office of Swift Specific Co., Atlanta, Ga. A friend recommended the use of Swift's Specific claiming that he himself had been greatly benefited by its use in some lung troubles. I resolved to try it. About four years ago I commenced to take S. S. S. according to directions. I found it an invigorating tonic, and have used about fifty bottles. The results are most remarkable. My cough has left me, my strength has returned, and I weigh sixty pounds more than I ever did in my life. It has been three years since I stopped the use of the medicine, but I have had no return of the disease, and there are no pains or weakness felt in my lungs. I do the hardest kind of mechanical work, and feel as well as I ever felt since I was a boy. These, I know, are wonderful statements to make, but I am honest when I say that I owe my existence and health to-day to Swift's Specific. It is the only medicine that brought me any permanent relief. I do not say that Swift's Specific will do this in every case, but I feel positive in affirming that it has done this much for me, and I would be recreant to the duty I owe to suffering humanity if I had failed to bear this cheerful testimony to the merits of this wonderful medicine. I am well known in the city of Montgomery, and can refer to some of the best citizens in the city.

An Efficient Remedy

In all cases of Bronchial and Pulmonary Affections is AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. As such it is recognized and prescribed by the medical profession, and in many thousands of families, for the past forty years, it has been regarded as an invaluable household remedy. It is a preparation that only requires to be taken in very small quantities, and a few doses of it administered in the early stages of a cold or cough will effect a speedy cure, and may, very possibly, save life. There is no doubt whatever that

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral

Has preserved the lives of great numbers of persons, by arresting the development of Laryngitis, Bronchitis, Pneumonia, and Pulmonary Consumption, and by the cure of those dangerous maladies. It should be kept ready for use in every family where there are children, as it is a medicine far superior to all others in the treatment of Croup, the alleviation of Whooping Cough, and the cure of Colds and Influenza, ailments peculiarly incidental to childhood and youth. Promptitude in dealing with all diseases of this class is of the utmost importance. The loss of a single day may, in many cases, entail fatal consequences. Do not waste precious time in experimenting with medicines of doubtful efficacy, while the malady is constantly gaining a deeper hold, but take at once the speediest and most certain to cure,

Many suffering people drag themselves about with failing strength, feeling that they are steadily sinking into the grave, when by using Parker's Tonic they would find a cure commencing with the first dose, and vitality and strength surely coming back to them.

"I am 51 years old; have been sick nearly all my life, and ought to know something about medicine, and I do. I have used Parker's Tonic freely by this time. I have used it and consider it the best remedy for more than a year, and consider it the best remedy I have ever known. In fact, I now find no other medicine necessary. For weakness, debility, rheumatism, and that class of ailments peculiar to women, for which I suffered so long, it has no equal. I can from which I suffered so long, it has no equal. I do not see how any one can afford to do without so valuable a medicine."—MRS. HATTIE N. GRAVES, cor. East and Front streets, Providence, R. I.

LOVE'S ARITHMETIC.

Chicago News.

She was one and I was one
strolling o'er the heather,
Yet before the year was done
We were one together.
Love's a queer arithmetician—
In the rule of his addition
He lays down the proposition,
One and one make one.

She and I, alas, are two,
since, unwisely mated,
Having nothing else to do,
We were separated.
Now, I would's sum that by this action
Each were made a single fraction;
Yet 'tis held in Love's subtraction
One from one leaves two.

BLAINE'S BOOK.

Extracts from the Second Volume—Interesting Sketches of Public Men.

The second volume of James G. Blaine's "Twenty Years in Congress," now nearly ready for delivery, will arrest more attention than its predecessor. Mr. Blaine's descriptions of the characteristics of the public men of the time of which he writes are especially interesting. In writing of the Fortieth Congress he thus depicts Carl Schurz:

"He has not become rooted and grounded any where; he has never established a home; is not identified with any community; is not interwoven with the interests of any locality or any class; has no fixed relation to Church or state, to professional, political or social life; has acquired none of that companionship and confidence which unite old neighbors in the closest ties, and give to friendship its fullest developments, its most gracious attributes. The same unsteadiness has entered as a striking feature in the public career of Mr. Schurz. He boasts himself incapable of attachment to party, and in that respect radically differs from the great body of his American citizens. He cannot even comprehend that exalted sentiment of honorable aspirations in public life which holds together successive generations of men—a sentiment which, in the United States, causes the Democrat to reverence the memory of Jefferson and Jackson and Douglas, which causes his opponent to glory in the achievements of Hamilton, Clay and Lincoln—a sentiment which in England has bound the Whigs in a common faith and common glory from Walpole to Gladstone."

Of General Butler he says: "General Butler had long been regarded as a powerful antagonist at the bar, and he fully maintained his reputation in the parliamentary arguments in which he became at once involved. He exhibited an extraordinary capacity for agitation, possessing in a high degree what John Randolph described as the 'talent for turbulence.' His mind was never at rest. While not appearing to seek controversies, he possessed a singular power of throwing the House into turmoil and disputation. The stormier the scene the greater his apparent enjoyment, and the more striking the display of his peculiar ability. His readiness of repartee, his great resources of information, his familiarity with all the expedients and subtleties of logical and illogical discussion, contributed to make him not only prominent, but formidable in the House for many years. He was distinguished by habits of industry, had the patience and the power required for thorough investigation, and seemed to possess a keen insight into the personal defects, the motives and the weaknesses of his rivals."

Horace Greeley and the Presidential contest of 1872 are thus described: "No other candidate could have presented such an antithesis of strength and of weakness. He was the ablest polemic this country has ever produced. His command of strong idiomatic controversial English was unrivalled. His faculty of lucid statement and compact reasoning has never been surpassed. Without the graces of fancy or the arts of rhetoric, he was incomparable in direct, pungent, forcible discussion. A keen observer and an omnivorous reader, he acquired an immense fund of varied knowledge, and he marshalled facts with singular skill and aptness. In an era remarkable for strong editors in the New York press, embracing Raymond, of the Times, the elder Bennett, of the Herald, Watson Webb, of the Courier and Enquirer, William Cullen Bryant, of the Evening Post, with Thurlow Weed and Edwin Croswell in the rival journals at Albany, Mr. Greeley easily surpassed them all. His mind was original, creative, incessantly active. His industry was as unswerving as his fertility was enexhaustible. Great as was his intellectual power, his chief strength came from the depth and earnestness of his moral convictions. In the long and arduous battle against the aggressions of slavery he had been sleepless and untiring in rousing and quickening the public conscience. He was keenly alive to the distinctions of right and wrong, and his philanthropy responded to every call of humanity. His sympathies were easily touched by the sufferings of the famine-stricken Irish and by the wrongs of the plundered Indians.

Next to Henry Clay, whose ardent disciple he was, he had done more than any other man to educate his countrymen in the American system of protection to home industry. He had on all occasions zealously guarded the rights of labor, he has waged unsparing war on the evils of intemperance, he had made himself an oracle with the American farmer, and his influence was even more potent in the remote prairie homes than within the shadow of Printing House square. In any reckoning of the present forces of the century Horace Greeley must be counted among the foremost, intellectually and morally. When he left the fields of labor in which he had become illustrious to pass the ordeal of a Presidential candidate, the opposite and weaker sides of his character and career were brought into view. He was headstrong, impulsive and opinionated. He was a powerful agitator and matchless leader of debate, rather than a master of government. Those who most admired his honesty, courage and power in the realm of his greatness most distrusted his fitness to hold the reins of administration. He had in critical periods evinced a want both of firmness and of sagacity. When the Southern States were on the eve of secession and the temper of the country was on trial he had, though with honest intentions, shown signs of irresolution and vacillation. When he was betrayed into the ill-advised and abortive peace negotiations with Southern Commissioners at Niagara he had displayed the lack of tact and preparation, which made the people doubt the solidity and coolness of his judgment. His method of dealing with the most intricate problems of finance seemed experimental and rash. Mr. Greeley had, moreover, weakened himself by showing a singular thirst for public office. It is strange that one who had a commanding station, and wielded an unequal influence, should have been ambitious for the smaller honor of public life. But Mr. Greeley had carved even minor offices, from which he could have derived no distinction, and, in his own phrase, had dissolved the firm of Seward, Weed & Greeley because, as he conceived, his claims to official promotion were not fairly recognised. This known aspiration added to the reasons which discredited his unnatural alliance with the Democracy. His personal characteristics, always marked, were exaggerated and distorted in the portraitures drawn by his adversaries. All adverse considerations were brought to bear with irresistible effect as the canvass proceeded, and his splendid services and undeniable greatness could not weigh in the scales against the political element and personal disqualifications with which has Presidential candidacy was identified.

Mr. Blaine speaks thus of Mr. Tilden: "Mr. Tilden has been the subject of vehement and contradictory judgments. His friends have well nigh canonised him as representing the highest type of public virtue; his foes have painted him as an adept in craft and intrigue. His partisans have held him up as the evangel of a new and purer dispensation; his opponents declare that his ability is marred by selfishness and characterized by cunning. His followers have exalted him as the ablest and most high-minded statesman of the times; his critics have described him as a most artful, astute, and unscrupulous politician. The truth doubtless lies between the two extremes. Adroit, ingenious, wary; skillful to plan and strong to execute; cautious in judgment and vigorous in action; taciturn and mysterious as a rule, and yet singularly open and frank on occasions; resting on the old traditions, yet leading in new pathways; surprising in the force of his blows, and yet leaving a sense of reserved power, Mr. Tilden unquestionably ranks among the greatest masters of political management that our day has seen. Certain it is that his extraordinary success and his exceptional position had inspired the Democratic party with the conviction that he was the one man to command victory, and he moved forward to the Presidential nomination with a confidence which discouraged his opponents and inspired his supporters with a sense of irresistable strength."

Garfield is said to represent the liberal and progressive spirit of Republicanism, without being visionary and practical, and his nomination was accepted as placing the party on advanced grounds.

The book practically ends with a cool and brief notice of President Arthur and the record of his nomination for the Vice Presidency.

Joseph Cook and the Learned Barber.

Boston Letter to the Minneapolis Tribune.

It is not known that the greatest man was ever put down but once, and then it was by a Boston barber. He was gracious enough to tell of it himself, using the incidents to illustrate a point which he made that in Boston alone were to be found high culture and literary taste clothed in the lowly grab of a humble menial at his daily toil. He sat in a barber's chair at the Tremont House one day, and while being shorn of his ambrosial locks was startled by having the barber ask him if he had read a certain article that had recently been published in a St. Louis paper (by Hartmann, I believe, touching some phase of the Darwinian theory of evolution. This was a matter that Mr Cook would have been glad to discuss but unfortunately he was unable to do so intelligently, for the season that he had not read the article, though the unpretentious barber clearly showed by his manner that the person who hadn't read that particular article wasn't worth talking to on so ordinary a subject. Not long afterward, as Mr. Cook tells it, he was in the West, and made a point of visiting St. Louis for the sole purpose of hunting up that article. His search was successful, and a few days later, on returning to Boston, he hastened to the Tremont House barber's, patiently waited his turn in the learned man's chair, and having gained the coveted seat, proceeded to open up the subject anew. The barber allowed the reverend gentleman to disclose his knowledge of that particular article, then he interposed his cold carrier to any further conversation: "Mr. Cook, I perceive that you have read something upon the matter, but the article you speak of has been only recently published. It was not the original article of which I spoke to you several weeks ago and which it is very evident you have not read." Mr. Cook had his tonsorial job finished in silence and went out abashed from the superior presence.
