THE WITNESSES.

Day by day in the opening meadow,
The cowslips swing their bells of gold:
And the young leaves throng like merry children.
The forest windows grim and old.

Day by day, with a blow that strengthens,
The sun god smites the springing corn;
Doubly cool are the dews of evening,
Doubly sweet is the breath of morn.

Day by day in the lower pastures
Heavier mists at twilight fall,
The sheaves stand thick on the short white stubble,
The peaches glow on the orchard wall.

Day by day, over hill and valley,
The snowflakes wing their passage slow,
Cold white ghosts of the forest children
Dead in the tangled brakes below.
ALFRED WOOD.

SOPHRONIA.

It was a small story-and-a-half cottage, painted white, with green blinds. The white paint had lost its prestine purity and the green of the blinds was faded and dusty. A hinge of the gate was broken and the gate swung and creaked hideously; the little patch of grass in front sorely needed attention. The sewing machine agent noted these things without knowing it, as he jumped from his buggy and walked toward the front door. He was of an unbeautiful Yankee type—blue-eyed, sandy-haired, and shambled somewhat in his gait—yet you might look long in his lean face, with its twinkling eyes and frequent smile, before you could detect an untrustworthy lineament.

There was no bell, so he rapped. No answer. He rapped again. This time a foot-step might be heard within, and presently the door was held slightly ajar and then flung wide open, as if to welcome a long-expected guest. The sewing machine agent was used to all kinds of receptions, and did not lose a second in beginning his well-learned lesson.

"I am representing the firm of Gusset & Hemm, sewing machine manufactures, madam, and would like to show you one of the machines, unless you have one already. Have you a sewing-machine?"

No answer.

"We sell them for cash or installments and warrant them satisfactory. I would like to show you a Gussett & Hemm; could bring the machine right in and show you how it works. Did you say you had a machine?"

No answer.

"Or, if you have a machine and it isn't quite satisfactory, we would take it in part payment for a new one." He looked at the figure before him, a little woman dressed in black, her once sunny hair streaked with gray and hidden under a widow's cap, her face pale and worn. She might have been 35 or 40 years old, the agent's own age, but time had laid a heavier hand on the woman than the man. He noted that she trembled and looked fixedly at him, and thought, in his Yankee vernacular, "Nervous critter, afraid of tramps and peddlers, likely." He rambled on in his usual fashion, extolling his wares, and finally wound up with, "I'll just fetch in the machine and see how you like it."

At this the woman found her tongue. "No, don't," she said breathlessly.

"Did you say you had a machine, madam?" asked the agent.

"Yes," she said; and then added, hesitatingly, "but it is out of order. Perhaps you could fix it for me," and held the door open wider, as a mute invitation for him to enter. He availed himself of it at once, walking straight into the small front room, bare, destitute of ornament, its most costly furnishing being the sewing-machine, at which he seated himself without loss of a moment. It sang and buzzed under the stress of his rapid foot and hand.

"Needs oiling," he said—whirr—whirr. "A new belt would be a mighty good thing on this 'ere; I'll take this up a little"—whirr—whirr—. "Now, I'll tell you, ma'am, you had better let me fetch you up a Gussett & Hemm; you'll like it a great deal better than this one, and you can have plenty of time to pay for it in——"

"No, no," said the widow, hastily. "I couldn't pay for another one. I was two years doing slop work enough to pay for this, and I had to support my child besides."

"Sho! you don't say so," said the agent, with sympathy. "Paid a high price, didn't ye? Well, I'll tell you candidly there don't seem to be nothin' the matter with this, except that it ain't the newest fashion. Here's my card—Azariah Adams, with Gussett & Hemm—I'd like to leave it, and if you want any sewing machine supplies, needles, or winders, or anything of that sort, I'll take your order now and bring it when I come around to deliver machines in two weeks."

"Bring me some needles," said the widow, eagerly.

The agent took out his note book. "What name, madam?"

Mrs. Twitchell," said the widow, and seemed to look searchingly through her glasses at the agent. He scribbled a minute, thanked her, went out, and scrambled into his buggy with a word to his horse, and drove away whistling cheerily. Mrs. Twitchell dropped into her seat, buried her face in her hands, and cried softly, but unceasingly, until her little daughter came home from play. The child saw no signs of tears, however. To her she was the same gentle, careworn, silent mother she had always known; nor could the little one dream that old memories were rising and rushing within her mother's heart like the spring floods, almost overwhelming her with their force.

When Azariah Adams came again the summer had fairly begun, and Mrs. Twitchell set doors and windows wide open that the sweet perfumed night air might fill the whole small cottage. Besides, she placed a bouquet of the common wild flowers in a glass tumbler on the sewing machine. She herself retained her former aspect, except that her black dress was laid aside, and a gray dress and a white apron lent her a Quaker-like semblance.

Mr. Adams gave greeting as to an old and valued customer, with respect and fervor, produced the needles, received a few cents which were due, and took up his hat to go. But the widow, in her usual hesitating way, detained him.

"Shall you be this way again soon?" she asked.

"Yes, I shall," said Azariah, promptly. "I've sold more machines this time, and I've got to come and deliver them inside of a fortnight. Changed your mind about a new machine?"

"No," said the widow. "I only thought I would have a new hemmer if you could bring one."

With his usual imperturbable cheerfulness, Azariah noted down the new order and prepared to depart, when through the open door flashed a vision of beauty, a tiny, 6-year-old girl, golden-haired, azure-eyed, music-voiced. She stopped short at the sight of the stranger, then fled to her mother's side.

"I swanny!" said the sewing machine agent, under his breath.

"This is my little girl," volunteered Mrs. Twitchell, smoothing the sunny head.

Azariah sat down in the nearest chair. "You should knock me down with a feather," said he presently. "That child is the living image of one I knew thirty odd years ago. What's your name, sissy?"

"Annie S. Twitchell," solemnly answered the little one, with a steady look out of her deep eyes.

"This little girl I used to know was named Sophrony—Sophrony Miller. You hain't no relations named Miller, have you?" he asked Mrs. Twitchell.

"Yes, but they're far removed," she responded, with unconscious bitterness. Far removed, indeed, was the beautiful child Sophrony from the middle-aged, worn Widow Twitchell.

Azariah seemed to have forgotten his usual energetic haste. With softened voice and ingenious coaxing he enticed the little one to his side, then to his knee. Mrs. Twitchell took up her sewing and listened to the talk going on between the two.

"Where did you know these Millers you spoke of?" she said, after a while.

"They lived in the same place where I was born," said Azariah. "Sophrony Miller was the prettiest critter you ever did see. She looked just like this little one of your'n, and when she was just about as big as this one she and I used to go to school together, and Sabbath school, too. She hadn't no parents, so her aunt brought her up. It don't seem but a little while since Sophrony and I went along the road hand in hand together, picking blackberries or wintergreens or whatever—'cording to the season—or sat together in meetin' with my old grand'ther feeding us pep'mints to keep us quiet. He was a master hand for pep'mints—loved 'em and always carried 'em. Fact, he smelt so strong of 'em all the time they used to call him old Pep'mint Adams."

Annie had been regarding him with great gravity, and now asked: "Do you love pep'mints? I do!"

Azariah burst into a laugh.

"You see if I don't bring you some the next time I come," said he. "But there's a woman a mile down the road here that's expecting a machine, and if I don't get it to her this afternoon she'll give me ballyhack, so I must go now. Give me a kiss, Sophrony—Annie, I mean—and good by, ma'am."

He took his lean, lank frame out of the house, leaving behind his two firm friends.

He came again and brought the hemmer and some peppermint for Annie. Then he called to show a new attachment to sewing machines and insisted on leaving it for a trial. Then he called to take it away, as Mrs. Twitchell did not purchase it. Then he called to see little Annie. Then he called boldly to see Mrs. Twitchell herself. The nearest neighbor looked out of the window at the frequent visitor and observed: "I believe my soul Widder Twitchell's got a beau!"

The courtship was short. Azariah made his appearance one evening in Mrs. Twitchell's front room and at once assumed his favorite attitude—one knee crossed over the other, and balancing his chair on two legs.

"See here!" he said, abruptly, "you know I told you once about a girl named Sophrony Miller——"

"Yes," answered the widow, in the breathless way which seemed to be habitual.

"Well, I didn't tell you she was my girl," continued Azariah, "but she was. We was engaged. We was going to be married. Everything was arranged, and I went to the city to get a job. I was gone longer'n I expected, and when I come back, lo! and behold, Sophrony was gone! Yes, gone! I never knew where, nor why, except that her aunt had died and she hadn't no home; but she would have had a home if she'd waited till I got there.

"Well, never mind Sophrony now, only she's the reason why I never wanted to get married since till now. You remind me of her, and I took to you the first time I see you. I can take care of you and Annie, too. Say, what the reason you and I can't get along together?"

Mrs. Twitchell was visibly trembling, and her voice shook as she replied: "If you can't have Sophrony you'll take me?"

"No matter about Sophrony. I want you."

"Suppose you could have Sophrony and me, too?"

"Well, I ain't a Mormon," began Azariah, but the widow interrupted him by leaving the room abruptly. Azariah started after her for a moment, letting the two forelegs of his chair drop to the floor. She reappeared as hastily as she departed. But was it the Widow Twitchell, with spectacles and cap discarded, a transient flush lending the bloom of youth to her pale cheeks, her hair arranged in the fashion of her girlhood, smiling, yet with tears sparkling in her eyes, making them as bright as of yore? Azariah made two strides across the narrow room, and his long arm closed about her slender form. No doubts were his, no question arose in his faithful heart; all he said was: "Sophrony, Sophrony, is it you?"

"I had to go away after aunt died," said Sophronia later in the evening. "I went to see if I could earn a little in the factory. I ain't no hand to write, you know, I never was, but I did write after awhile, and never got no answer. Then some of the girls from home came visiting the factory, and they said they heard you'd got married in the city!"

"'Twas a lie," said Azariah, thumping the table with his fists.

"I just gave up then! And when Mr. Twitchell came courting me I thought I might as well take him. He wasn't good to me, Azariah, he drank; he died before Annie was born. Annie's name is Annie Sophronia. I expected she'd tell you so long before now. I've earned her living and mine doing hand sewing, and it weakened my eyes, so I began to wear glasses, but since I bought my sewing machine they've grown stronger, and I'm going to leave off the glasses now, Azariah!"

"What say?" replied the lover, beaming with unmistakable happiness.

"You were truer to me than I was to you, for I got married and you didn't. But you didn't know me till I took off my cap and specs, and I knew you the first day you came peddling to the door!"

Piles! Piles! Itching Piles.

SYMPTOMS.—Moisture; intense itching and stinging; most at night; worse by scratching. If allowed to continue tumors form, which often bleed and ulcerate, becoming very sore. SWAYNE'S OINTMENT stops the itching and bleeding, heals ulceration, and in most cases removes the tumors. At druggists or by mail, for 50 cents. Dr. Swayne & Son, Philadelphia.

An Explanation.

What is this "nervous trouble" with which so many seem now to be afflicted? If you will remember a few years ago the word Malaria was comparatively unknown—to-day it is as common as any word in the English language, yet this word covers only the meaning of another word used by our forefathers in times past. So it is with nervous diseases, as they and Malaria are intended to cover what our grandfathers called Biliousness, and all are caused by troubles that arise from a diseased condition of the Liver which in performing its functions finding it cannot dispose of the bile through the ordinary channel is compelled to pass it off through the system, causing nervous troubles, Malaria, Bilious Fever, etc. You who are suffering can well appreciate a cure. We recommend Green's August Flower. Its cures are marvelous. D&W

Early last week hail stones as large as the average peach fell in the country around Spring Branch, Neb.

"The World Moves,"

Maintained Galileo, when his tormentors racked him for advocating the true system of Copernicus. Certain follies hold out, however, against the illumination of discovery and experience. There are hosts of people who, because they have adopted certain principles, continue to swallow them to their dying day in defiance of the laws of common sense. Mercury, drastic purgatives, super-potent narcotics and sedatives, though they have given ground before the irresistible progress of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, a national, painless remedy for disorders of the liver, the stomach and the bowels, still continue to make ambulating apothecaries shops of many stomachs. The symptoms of liver trouble are easily remediable without any abdominal disturbance with this beneficent alterative. So also are constipation, sick headache, heartburn and an inability to digest satisfactorily. It cures fever and ague, rheumatism and kidney trouble.

FINANCE AND TRADE.

The Features of the Money and Stock Markets.

NEW YORK, August 31.—Money on call easy at 1½@2 per cent; closed offered at 1½ per cent. Prime mercantile paper 4½@6½ per cent. Sterling exchange quiet but steady and unchanged. Total sales of stocks were 161,319 shares.

To-day's stock market was in all probability the most uninteresting for a whole day's session that there has been for a long time. First prices were irregular with advances in a majority and a moderate business, but the movements in the early dealings were quite irregular, with no special tendency until near noon, when prices rose slightly. The dullness became intense after that time, and generally a heavy tone marked the limited transactions. There was some improvement in the last hour, but it was short lived and the market finally closed dull and steady at insignificant changes from the opening prices. The changes were generally for fractional amounts only.

Railroad bonds more active; sales $1,119,000.
Government and State bonds dull and steady.

Cocoa.

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.

EPPS'S COCOA

Breakfast.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

Made simply with boiling water or milk. Sold only in half-pound tins by Grocers, labeled thus:
