The season at Brighton will begin today. The hotels will open next week, several of the cottages will be occupied and a dozen house parties will foregather at the pretty retreat. The roads are in better condition than they have been for several weeks, in spite of the string of ore wagons that are winding down the canyon, and those who have no automobile facilities are taking advantage of the train to Park City and a horseback ride over the mountains. The canyon will be full of fishermen on Monday and Tuesday, and most of the week for that matter, though the waters are a little swift at present and the experts who cannot go far from town prefer to wait a fortnight.
