tended the Sabbath-school and led the religious element of the neighborhood, stepped forward and said:

"Well, boys, it is all right here, and no suspicion, and no need of any ceremony; let us take him home."

And then Joe took Willie in his arms and held him closely, with the little face against his own, as if he were still living, and started for the cottage. Some of the people followed, in a picturesque procession, through the pasture lot and down the bank, and along by the shore of the pond. When the house was reached a few of the women went in to soothe Mary; and Joe and the doctor went in also, and the people clustered about the door.

In the course of an hour it seemed that all had been done that could be done for Walter and Mary, and the people, except a few, who remained as watchers and helpers, dispersed to their homes.

The three days that followed were bright, sunny days. A strange stillness and unusual hush reigned in the neighborhood of the cottage. The harsh, grating sound of the saw-mill was not heard as at other times, for the mill was stopped in token of respect for the real sorrow. Only the softly flowing stream was heard, mingling its susurrus with the hum of the bee in the garden.

Now and then groups of children, dressed in their Sunday attire, would come down the bank, and with hushed voices and fearful looks steal up toward the cottage door. Then kind Joe would see them, and would come out and take them in to see Willie; and in a few moments they would issue forth again and walk sadly homeward, and as they went the sunlight dried their tears.

And farmers and hunters came from many miles away "to see the little boy that was killed by a sheep." Some of the rough men manifested their sympathy in exhibiting vindictive feelings towards the ram. After getting in and viewing the bruised corpse, they would come out with dark, determined looks, and grasping again the long rifle which they had brought with them and "stood up" by the door, they would inquire of any by-stander, with fierce emphasis, whether the ram that "did that" was dead. On being informed of his execution, they would say, "That will do," with an air that implied how much they would have enjoyed it to have had a shot at him. Indeed, it appeared that if the poor brute had been possessed of fifty or a hundred lives, so that each brute hunter might have taken one, it would have been a great relief and satisfaction.

On the fourth day Willie was buried. Mary continued inconsolable. All of the social influences which the neighborhood could command were put in operation from the time of the funeral onward, in order to cheer her and bind up her wounded spirit. Social meetings were held and pleasant little gatherings made for her. Wherever there was enjoyment Mary must be. She greatfully submitted herself to all their kindness, and tried to please her friends. But it seemed to do her little good. She remained pale, weak, and dispirited.

After a few months Walter and Mary discovered that somehow they were not suited with their farm. They sold the place at the first opportunity, and returned to their former home in New England, the remains of little Willie having been forwarded in advance to a cemetery there, with which they in their early days had been familiar.

Southern Women During the Rebellion.

The Atlantic for August has George Cary Eggleton's third paper on a "A Rebel's Recollections," which is devoted to the conduct of the Southern women during and after the war. He strengthens the general testimony as to the passionate and unyielding devotion of the women to "the cause," and the heroism with which they have borne poverty and deprivations since it became "lost." A few incidents illustrate the temper of the daughters of the South:

I remember a conversation between two of them—one a young wife whose husband was in the army and the elderly lady with no husband or son, but with many friends and near relatives in marching regiments. The younger lady remarked:

"I'm sure I do not hate our enemies. I earnestly hope their souls may go to heaven, but I would like to blow all their mortal bodies away, as fast as they come upon our soil."

"Why, you shock me, my dear," remarked the other; "I don't see why you want the Yankees to go to heaven! I hope to go there myself some day, and I'm sure I shouldn't want to go if I thought I should find any of them there."

This old lady was convinced from the first that the South would fail, and she based this belief upon the fact that we had permitted Yankees to build railroads through the Southern states. "I tell you," she would say, "that's what they built the roads for. They knew the war was coming, and they got ready for it. The railroads will whip us, you may depend. What else were they made for? We got on well enough without them, and we oughtn't to have let anybody build them." And no amount of reasoning would serve to shake her conviction that the people of the North had built all our railroads with treacherous intent, though the stock of the only road she had ever seen was held very largely by people along its line, many of whom were her own friend.

A young girl, ordinarily of a very gentle disposition, astonished a Federal Colonel the other day by an outburst of temper, which served at least to show the earnestness of her purpose to unhold her side of the argument. She lived in a country then for the first time held by the Federal army, and a Colonel, with some members of his staff, made her family the unwilling recipients of a call one morning. Seeing the piano open, the Colonel asked the young lady to play, she declined. He then went to the instrument himself, but he had hardly begun to play when the damsel, raising the piano top, severed nearly all the strings with a hatchet, saying to the astonished performer, as she did so:

"That's my piano, and it shall not give you a minute's pleasure." The Colonel bowed, apologized, and retired:

"If all your people are as ready as you to make costly sacrifices, we might as well go home."

And most of them were ready and willing to make similar sacrifices. One lady of my acquaintance knocked in the heads of a dozen casks of choice wine rather than allow some Federal officers to sip as many glasses of it. Another destroyed her own library, which was very precious to her, when that seemed the only way in which she could prevent the staff of a general officer, camped near her, from enjoying a few hours' reading in her parlor every morning.

There is a story of General Forrest, which will serve to show his opinion of the pluck and devotion of the Southern women. He was drawing his men up in line of battle one day, and it was evident that a sharp encounter was about to take place. Some ladies ran from a house that happened to stand just in front of his line and asked him anxiously:

"What shall we do, General; what shall we do?"

Strong in his faith, they only wished to help him in some way, and he replied:

"I really don't see that you can do much, except to stand on stumps, wave your bonnets, and shout, 'Hurrah boys!'"

Col. Fred Grant Thinks of Matrimony.

Mr. Charles Algernon Frederick Sartoris' "best man," Lieut. Col. Frederick Dent Grant, U. S. A., is contemplating matrimony. In fact, he has carried his contemplations to such an extent that he has made propositions to a beautiful young damsel of Chicago, and is now in all probability preparing plans and specifications for a bridal outfit that will fairly eclipse his British brother-in-law. To accomplish his hymenial predilections Lieut. Col. Grant has come to Chicago, and found in the person of Miss Ida Honore, daughter of H. H. Honore, Esq. one to whom he desires to join his fortunes, in peace and war, "for better, or worse." The gossips, who know all about these matters, say that the young lady reciprocates the preference shown her by Mr. Grant, and further state that the affair has so far developed as to set apart the day for the happy event, which will be in the charming month of October. Miss Honore is a sister of Mrs. Potter Palmer, who was one of the chosen guests of Miss Nellie Grant's wedding, and is, further-more, one of the leading ladies of Chicago society. As to where the nuptials will be performed it has not yet transpired, but of course Chicago will be the point, and it is safe to predict that it will be the most sumptuous affair the city has ever witnessed. Society people will be on the qui vive for particulars, and, as soon as cards are scattered, there will be the most extraordinary preparations placed on foot. The Sunday Times, as is usual in other matters, is first to make public this important impending event.—Chicago Times.

The Black Eye.

Shelton met his wife in the street one afternoon last week. He bowed and smiled, and then started back, dismay on every feature of his face. "Good heavens, my dear!" cried he, "where did you get that black eye?" "What black eye, old blindy?" was the loving reply of his wife. "Why, I never saw in the whole course of my school days, a more perfect black eye than the one you are now sporting." "You're not only blind, but a fool as well," answered his wife, raising her vail. She had no black eye. The black eye was caused by the present fashionable veil. Shelton didn't say much, but went on about his business. And when he returned to the store, he told his partner the story, and added: "I'm blowed if women aren't the blamedest fools out. The idea of my wife, a good, modest woman, wearing a veil that makes her look as though she was in the habit of getting drunk and having her eyes blackened by some disreputable acquaintance. I can't understand woman anyhow. I think it it was the fashion for women to be without noses, or blind, or carless, they'd stand the infliction. They stand anything to be in fashion, the false-haired, fools." "Oh no," cried his partner "not anything." "What in thunder and lightnin' is it that a woman wouldn't do to be in fashion?" asked Shelton in astonishment. "They won't any of them consent to lose their tongues, even for that supreme gratification." Shelton said nothing, but merely sighed. It was evident that he knew how a female tongue could work.

Mrs. Partington's Smart Boy.

"Plymouth Rock," being the subject given out for the exercises of the school, the teacher and boys were astonished at the following luminous composition by Ike Partington, which displays great historical acumen, and a most astonishing chronological facility:

Plymouth Rock.—This rock was brought to this country in the Mayflower, in the year 1492, by the Pilgrims, under the direction of Elder Osman Brewster, who afterwards moved to Boston and became an alderman of that city. It was on this rock that Governor Carver first shook hands with Samoset, who said: "Welcome Englishman!" It is recorded that when Samoset came up Governor Carver asked him if he was a real Ingine, or only a member of an Ingine company.

The rock has long been regarded as a famous place. The American Eagle for a great many years used to come and whet his beak on the rock, but in 1653 Miles Standish, in order to keep it from being stolen, carried it and put it in front of Pilgrim Hall, where it remains at the present time invested with great interest and an iron fence. The fence bears the Pilgrims in cast iron letters that can't be rubbed out.

The rock is a good deal worn out by the allusions touching it that are thrown off by Fourth of July orators. Plymouth Rock is the corner-stone of the cellar wall of our Republican structure, paragorically speaking, and the spirit of liberty sits upon it with a drawn sword in one hand and the torch of freedom in the other; and if foes invade the shore of Plymouth at high water—for they never can get in at low tide—they will throw this rock in their teeth. It is a precious legacy from the Past to the Present, and from it may be reckoned the Pilgrim's Progress.

APPLETONS'

AMERICAN CYCLOPÆDIA.

New Revised Edition.

Entirely rewritten by the ablest writers on every subject. Printed from new type, and illustrated with Several Thousand Engravings and Maps.

The work originally published under the title of THE NEW AMERICAN CYCLOPÆDIA was completed in 1863, since which time the wide circulation which it has attained in all parts of the United States, and the signal developments which have taken place in every branch of science, the arts, and art, have induced the editors and publishers to submit it to an exact and thorough revision, and to issue a new edition entitled THE AMERICAN CYCLOPÆDIA.

Within the last ten years the progress of discovery in every department of knowledge has made a new work of reference an imperative want.

The movement of political affairs has kept pace with the discoveries of science, and their fruitful application to the industrial and useful arts and the convenience and refinement of social life. Great wars and consequent revolutions have occurred, involving national changes of peculiar moment. The civil war of our own country, which was at its height when the last volume of the old work appeared, has happily been ended, and a new course of commercial and industrial activity has been commenced.

Large accessions to our geographical knowledge have been made by the indefatigable explorers of Africa.

The great political revolutions of the last decade, with the natural result of the lapse of time, have brought into public view a multitude of new men, whose names are in every one's mouth, and of whose lives every one is curious to know the particulars. Great battles have been fought and important sieges maintained, of which the details are as yet preserved only in the newspapers or in the transient publications of the day, but which ought now to take their place in permanent and authentic history.

In preparing the present edition for the press, it has accordingly been the aim of the editors to bring down the information to the latest possible dates, and to furnish an accurate account of the most recent discoveries in science, of every fresh production in literature, and of the newest invention in the practical arts, as well as to give a succinct and original record of the progress of political and historical events.

The work has been begun after long and careful preliminary labor, and with the most ample resources for carrying it on to a successful termination.

None of the original stereotype plates have been used, but every page has been printed on new type, forming in fact a new Cyclopædia, with the same plan and compass as its predecessor, but with a far greater pecuniary expenditure, and with such improvements in its composition as have been suggested by longer experience and enlarged knowledge.

The illustrations which are introduced for the first time in the present edition have been added not for the sake of pictorial effect, but to give greater lucidity and force to the explanations in the text. They embrace all branches of science and natural history, and depict the most famous and remarkable features of country, architecture, and art, as well as the various processes of mechanics and manufactures. Although intended for instruction rather than embellishment, no pains have been spared to insure their artistic excellence; the cost of their execution is enormous, and it is believed, they will find a welcome reception as an admirable feature of the Cyclopædia, and worthy of its high character.

This work is sold to Subscribers only, payable on delivery of each volume. It will be completed in sixteen large octavo volumes, each containing about 800 pages, fully illustrated with several thousand Wood Engravings, and with numerous Colored Lithographic Maps.
