WHAT IT DOES MEAN.

Taking Doctors' Places Out of Civil-Service Regulations.

It Would Open the Way for Appointments of Political Favorites.

Health Board President Wilson Declares His Opposition to the Bill.

The publication in yesterday's "Evening World" of the status and meaning of the bill introduced in the Legislature by Assemblyman [illegible] of Kings County, to remove all medical appointments in the service of the city of the counties of the state therein, from the restrictions of the civil service law, caused a profound sensation in all political and official circles.

The significance of the measure, which has passed the Assembly and is now pending in the Senate, was about it to be the abolition of all civil service examinations for police surgeons, medical attaches of the Fire, Health and Charities Departments, and to render it possible for the appointing powers, whether the Governor, Mayor or boards of commissioners, to place favorites in office regardless of any degree of professional ignorance or incompetence on the part of the appointee.

Opponents of the bill declare that its introduction by Assemblyman [illegible] was procured by interested parties in this city, who did not care to have it brought forward by any member from this city, because of the [illegible] of all "city bills" manifested by civil service reformers and others. They cite that scant and indistinct reference has been made to the bill in Albany dispatches, and express the belief that the intent of its sponsors was to avoid attracting attention to it until it should be passed in the hurly-burly of the closing hours of the session.

The bill reads:

"Doctors of medicine, legally admitted to practice their profession in this State, who are employed as physicians in or seek to enter as physicians the public service under any municipal department of a city, village, town or county, shall not be subject to the regulations prescribed in the laws regulating civil service examinations and appointments.

"Should the bill become a law, naturally the staff of doctors connected with the Health Department, and all the police surgeons in the municipalities will be included in its provisions, and deprived of the protection of the Civil Service law.

President Charles G. Wilson, of the Board of Health, when seen this morning, had not read the bill in full, but had seen the resume printed in "The Evening World."

"I am opposed to the bill, and hope it will not pass," he said, very emphatically, to the reporter. "If civil service rules are to govern any part of the State departments' appointive officers, they should govern all. I fail to discern a good, valid reason for exempting the civil service restrictions as affecting medical appointments.

"How would such a law affect this department? Well, that is a different thing to talk about. The never-ending changes going on in this Department."

A physician, who did not care to be quoted by name, but who is of high standing, said that the effort to make such a law was simply a scheme designed for political ends.

"Who Mr. Hennessy represents in his effort to promulgate such a law I have no knowledge, but it is clearly a political scheme, just the same."

for separately; and while 2,000 men wearing the shamrock are now marching through Brooklyn streets under the leadership of Marshal Anthony Duffy, another 2,000, just as sincere in believing themselves to be the members of the real Order of Hibernians, are falling in line along Bedford avenue, with James Fitzpatrick as their Marshal, to lead them on the same streets on which the first [illegible] paraded.

By an arrangement, in which neither organization will admit it took part, forsooth, but with which both are evidently well pleased, the parades march in inverse order, and so all who are not so bothered as to insist there is factional war, it will appear that Ireland is united again, and that the procession in which [illegible] marching is the best [illegible] station [illegible] back in the City of Churches on St. Patrick's Day.
