BEST TONIC IS S.S.S.

Few people get through the winter and spring without attacks from one of the many blood maladies that leave them weak and unfit to meet the trying warm season, and the blood so freighted with poisons that it is incapable of supplying the energy and tissue building properties necessary to health.

This condition is revealed in many ways, and by many symptoms, but all point to one thing—infected blood. And just as surely they call for the one true and tried S. S. S.

It insures blood purity and health. S. S. S. for 50 years has been the standard treatment for all blood troubles. Catarrh, rheumatism, malaria, skin diseases, and other troubles arising from impure and impoverished blood yield to S. S. S. The best tonic.

ORPET TESTIFIES REGARDING LAST TALK WITH GIRL

Youth Says He Did Not See Her Take Poison but That He Witnessed Dying Convulsions.

(BY MORNING JOURNAL SPECIAL LEASED WIRE)

Waukegan, Ills., June 26.—William H. Orpet, the 20-year-old University of Wisconsin student, charged with the murder of Marion Lambert, his school-girl sweetheart, took the witness stand this afternoon and told on direct examination of his meeting with her on February 9 and of her death. Adjournment for the night interrupted the recital which, will be resumed tomorrow.

He did not want to see her take poison nor have it about her, he testified, but he saw her dying convulsions. He supported the theory that the cyanide of potassium which caused her death was taken in powdered form and not in solution, as insisted by expert toxocologists called by the prosecution.

Noticed Powder on Face.

"I noticed a white powder on her face and one hand," he said. "The medicine," which he gave her to relieve a supposed delicate condition, he said, was simply molasses and water. He said he knew she could not be in a delicate condition and adopted this subterfuge to relieve her mind, as she kept insisting in letters that she was alarmed at her condition.

The witness gave an innocent interpretation of the alibi letters which he addressed to his mother and to Marion. He left Madison, February 8, in the hands of his friend, Otto Peterson, he left the two missives, postdated February 9 to be mailed on the latter date.

Explains Alibi Letters.

He explained that his own parents would have objected to his making the trip and that Marion objected to him. In case he should be seen and stories carried to either household he figured that the letters would be taken as proof positive to the contrary.

At the meeting in the woods he said Marion expressed alarm at her condition and he tried to persuade her that her fears were groundless. He offered her the molasses and water, as a "fixer," but she said that it would do her no good.

The Last Meeting.

He suggested that she would better catch her car and started away but she called him back and asked him if he was going to write to her any more. He said he thought not, and started away again.

"Something, I don't know what," made him turn around, he said. Marion had taken the poison. He could see she was in convulsions. He returned to her and said she had two more tremors.

Witness said that he became dazed and remembered only flying from the woods. He took a train back to Madison.

Bottle Is Found.

After leaving the woods he said he threw away the bottle of diluted molasses. The bottle was recovered nine days later by K. B. Hawkins and others sent out by attorneys whom Orpet had by that time retained.

The case of the defense began at the forenoon session with the opening statement by James H. Wilkerson, chief of counsel for the defendant. The statement was completed in the afternoon and to the surprise of those who have been attending the trial, Orpet was the first witness.

Defendant's Appearance.

Every eye turned toward him as his name was called, a slender youth of marked regularity of feature but nothing save a natural pallor to distinguish him in a crowd. He wore a dark suit and tie. For six weeks he had sat far down in a big chair, beside his mother with an expression which seemed part sullenness and part nervous strain.

His face lighted, however, as he heard his name called and with an encouraging look from Mrs. Orpet, he went forward and was sworn. His voice was plainly audible at first but soon developed periods of weakness. He recollected very little save the purport of his conversation with Marion.

Meeting in Woods.

As had been conjectured, Orpet spent the night of February 8-9 in the garage on the McCormick estate, of which his father is superintendent. He went to Helm's woods after walking around for an hour or more because he did not wish to be seen. He had arranged the night before to meet Marion on her way to school.

It was she, he said, who suggested that they go into the woods. She had come to the little interurban station of the Sacred Heart convent with Josephine Davis. She did not take the train which Josephine and the other girls took, however. When the train pulled out, leaving Marion alone, Orpet came from the edge of the woods, where he had been hiding, and joined her on the platform.

Guardsman Testifies.

He suggested, he said, that they go into the little waiting room, but she pointed to the woods and suggested that they go there. This they did.

Orpet's testimony was interrupted to allow Mr. Hawkins to testify as to the finding of the bottle, as he is a member of Battery C, Illinois national guard and under orders to proceed at once to the mobilization camp at Springfield.

Fashions, or Woman's Health

The first thing many persons think of doing on the Woman's Page of a newspaper is the Fashions. That is not what women most need to find there. Health is the first thing, and many women lack it. Notes telling how to preserve the health are of the greatest value and interest for women and, if they are suffering from women's ailments, they read with the most intense interest how other women get well from their ailments, and so they too get what made them well—Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

HOW TO SMOKE 'MODERATELY'

They tell us that smoking habits are changing. Men used to go into a cigar store and say "Give me a good ten-center," and then shut their eyes and choose. Nowadays men think before they smoke because it is now generally known that there are several different types of cigars that produce different results on the nerves, the heart and on the "smoke palate." Doctors agree that moderate smoking is best for a man if he wants to keep in the best of trim.

Now there are two ways to be a moderate smoker. One is to cut down the number of cigars per day. The other is to cut out too many heavy cigars. No man who enjoys smoking wants to give it up, and few men care to cut down the number of the cigars they smoke.

The safest and most sensible thing to do is to smoke cigars that have the incomparable Havana flavor yet are so made that they are not at all heavy. Smokers who use the Tom Moore cigar get their Havana fragrance but get it mild. It has taken the manufacturers twenty years of experience and effort to produce that result. This mildness of Tom Moores is partly due to giving the Havana leaves a two-years natural aging process before they are mellow enough to be made into cigars. The other factor for mildness is Tom Moore's silky Sumatra wrapper whose flavor is much lighter than the Havana leaf. People call Tom Moore the "light-hearted Havana" because it gives a man the satisfaction to be had only with Havana tobacco, and yet without heavy tobacco head-fuzziness. Tom Moore cigars leave a man's head clear and ready for business. They help smokers to be moderate smokers, and moderate smokers always keep their palates clean and their tobacco enjoyment in good working order. It sounds reasonable, doesn't it?

Out of a pound of fish she can make a delicious luncheon dish, and if she is clever have enough left for a salad for supper, or, if the evening be cool, for a warming chowder, which will take the chill off the evening.
