SHE PLAYED THE RED TO WIN

A Strange Story of How a Young Girl Won a Fortune at a Gambling Table.

The "Lounger of the Washington Sunday Herald relates the following story: "There is a trite but true saying that 'truth is stranger than fiction.' In all the range of romance I never read a more wonderful story than that I shall try to tell as it was told me by one of the greatest singers the world has ever known. 'Four years ago,' said the lady relating the story, 'there was a young American girl in an Italian city who was studying music. She came rom a quiet New England village, and with her mother located in a place celebrated for its masters to undergo a complete musical training. Her master was a thoroughly conscientious Italian, whose voice had broken down just as he became to be famous as a tenor, and so he had to give up his life long aspirations, and train others to gather in the golden fortune that by his art he himself hoped to win. The girl, who had been given the sweet old Puritan name of Faith, studied dilligently, and was in her second year's course when an illness attacked her mother. The money set aside for Faith's musical studies was well-nigh spent in the mother's sickness. What to do the daughter did not know. They were without friends, and the future was without hope. One night before retiring the girl knelt by her bedside and fervently prayed God to help her. She arose from her prayer comforted, for in her simple way she believed in God, and that He always heard the prayers of his children who prayed believing in Him. That night she dreamed a curious dream. She saw her dead father as he had appeared in life. He said to ker, "Believe in God, He will help you." The next night the dream was repeated. The third night she dreamed she was at Monaco; that she had gone into the great Kursaall where they were playing. She sat down at a table and put a sum of money on the red squares and let it stay until the red had won thirteen times. Her father stood behind her chair as she sat, and when she finished he put his hands on her head and gave her his blessing, and then she awoke. The dream puzzled her. She had never been at Manaco. She had never seen the gambling hall, and yet the whole place appeared so vividly in her dream! When her teacher came that day she told him of her dream and these that had preceded it. He listened attentively. Like all Italians, he was superstitious. He thought of it all day. When he saw her again he said: 'Why not try it? God helps us all in his own mysterious way.' That night her father came again and said, 'Go!' That decided her. She told her mother that she thought a little rest and recreation would help her, and said her teacher and his daughter, who were taking a little excursion, had asked her to join them. Might she go? The mother thought for a moment, and could see no harm in it to her child. She would only be away one night, and had a favorite servant to keep her company during her daughters absence. The next morning they (the teacher, his daughter and Faith) took their departure. They looked about the beautiful garden of Monaco, as lovely as the garden of Eden before the fall. At 9 the three entered the great Kursaal. It was just as the girl had seen it all in her dream. The place was full of well-dressed people, ladies and gentlemen, a band was playing beautiful music. In the corner she recognized the table she had seen in her dreams, with a swelling heart and emotions that cannot be described, she sat down, and the Italian stood up behind her. During the day she had determined what to do.

"She drew from her portemonie two notes, each for one English pound, and the Italian showed her how to put them on the red spot. What if it were all a superstitious folly? What if she was simply wasting in a wicked gambling house the little money they had between them and starvation? She dared not think. She must do what her father had bidden her in her dream. 'Ma'amselle has won,' she heard the croupier say. 'Let it stay,' she replied, 'What is the limit?' asked the Italian. 'We have no limit,' the well-dressed cold-blooded man with the suave voice said. She won again and again. The red had come up three times in succession. She had won £16 pounds, or $80 of our money. 'Will not the lady take up her money?' said the croupier. 'No,' she said, 'Let it alone. I am going to play the red to win thirteen times.' He shrugged his shoulders imperceptibly. The game went on. At the sixth play her winnings were $640. She sat like a woman in a trance. When the red had won for the eighth time she had $2,560. Oh, what should she do? Before her there was a small fortune. Ought she not take it and go? By this time a crowd had gathered. Something new was going on. A woman with a face like the dead had won eight times in succession on the red. A few old gamblers began to back the red to lose. It was impossible that the red should come up again. The game continued. Nothing was heard but the click of the ivory and the voice of the croupier saying: 'The red wins again.' At the tenth play she had $10,240. Her excitement was uncontrollable. Here before her was more money than she had ever seen in all her life before. It was hers. Should she take it and go? 'No,' she managed to whisper, 'I will play it all, lose or win, till I have played the red thirteen times!' The red came up again at the eleventh play. She had $20,480 For a moment she hesitated. She would take God's gift—for it was His, she said—and go. Something said to her 'Play the thirteen times' She did. At the twelfth play she had $40,960. She gasped like one fainting. 'Give her air,' said one just behind her. 'Once more, once more!' she whispered. Thirteen came, and the red won. She had $81,920. There was a soft sigh. 'Give her air, she has fainted,' said the croupier. The excitement had communicated itself to the crowd who had gathered and watched. 'No more,' she managed to utter. It was over. The croupier gave her her money in English bills, £100 each, and calling a carriage, she and her friends left with an immense fortune made in half an hour. The next turn the red lost."

He Didn't Want to Go to Either Place.

Old Capt. B—— of Boothbay, one of the most experenced pilots on the Maine coast, and who has been around the world many times, recently lay by on what was called his deathbed. A minister who called thought he would read a chapter to him, so he called for a bible. A black book, very much resembling a bible, was handed the visitor, who opened it but found it to be a copy of the "Coast Pilot." Upon learning that it was not the Pilot the minister wanted, the sick man exclaimed: "That book will pilot you all around the world, and if it ain't good to pilot you to heaven or —— I don't want to go to either place." The clergymen retired, and the captain still sails on the briny.

MARY ANDERSON.

The Prince of Wales Propounds a Question—The Actress Honored by the Princess.

LONDON, Oct. 23.—It has leaked out that the Prince of Wales has called Miss Anderson to account for her reported utterance concerning him. At an interview which took place the other night at the Lyceum Theatre, the first question blurted out by his royal highness was: "Is it true that you said you would not see me?" Miss Anderson replied with a great deal of apparent embarassment: "I said I would not seek the honor." This was so apparent an evasion that a great deal of comment has been passed in high quarters, and society circles profess themselves to be profoundly astonished by the lack of pride shown by the Prince of Wales in honoring Miss Anderson with his presence. At one of the presentations the Princess, before deciding to invite Miss. Anderson into the royal box, sent for Mr. Griffin her manager, and questioned him closely concerning her repertory, the number of years she had been on the stage, etc. The Princess then intimated that she wished to see Miss Anderson, and requested Mr. Griffin to send her in. Miss Anderson, who, under the circumstances, did not wish the meetiag, sent back word that she had made it a rule never to see outsiders during the performance, and that even on this occasion she preferred not to break it. She said, however, that she would be most happy to meet her Royal Highness after she had completed her performance. The Princess then said: "We never wait for the end of a piece," and negotiations apparently closed. The piece went on, and the royal party remained, and when it was over, Miss Anderson was surprised by her manager, who came with the announcement that their royal highnesses were waiting in the passage to see her. There was, of course, no further escape, and she immediately left the stage to meet them. The lady's performance was so pleasing that the Princess had apparently forgotten what, under ordinary circumstances, would have amounted to an affront, and was effusively cordial in her greeting. The Prince was inclined to be more reserved; and asked the question above quoted point blank. The princess, however, was not to be put away from her amiable intentions, and showered her compliments in a most lavish manner. She said that she particularly wished to be informed of any change in the programme, as she was determined to see Miss Anderson in all her characters.

FIGHTING THE WHALES.

Shooting the Monsters of the Deep.

About a week ago Mr. Peter Warner, the well known contractor, and a veteran fisherman started out on a fishing excursion in a small boat. They carried with them a Winchester rifle and a shot gun, in order possibly to bag some of the game that abounds the laguna which extends some three miles inland from shore. They had rowed out but a few miles when two whales, of the bottle-nose species, were espied a short distance from the boat. Mr. Warner immediately grasped his rifle, fired, and apparently wounded one of them. Infuriated, the monster lashed the water into foam, and made desperate efforts to reach them. After a second and third shot, a vital spot in one of them was reached, and only one was left to cambat with. They then began fighting at the remaining one, but though wounding it several times, it seemed utterly impossible to disable it. It made most furious attacks upon them, and with distended jaws it seemed at times as if about to engulf boat and all. Twelve shots were fired into it and still it continued its onslaught. It splashed and foamed, spreading heavy spray in all directions, and nothing but a skillfull managemant kept the boat a safe distance from its fury. Now and then it would plunge under the water, endeavor to get under the boat and plunge it skyward, but the steady "old salt" managed each time to whirl the boat beyond its reach. The situation was growing serious as the cartridges in the rifle were being exhausted, and it seemed well nigh impossible to reload while the monster was making such furious attacks. While attempting it a sudden attack of the whale made it necessary to use the shot gun, and Mr. Warner fired hastily, discharging both loads into its face. It was a most fortunate shot, as it took effect in the eyes of the whale, and must have totally blinded it. The pain served to increase its ferocity, but its efforts were now futile, and it was an easy matter to row to a safer distance, where the rifle was reloaded and the monster killed at leisure. The two whales were then towed in shore, and quite a large quantity of oil has been since tried out.—Los Angeles Times.

Jay Gould's Story of Mr. Cramp The Ship Builder.

"I must tell you a little by-play I witnessed in the engine room on the trial trip," he continued. "Our friend here was hanging anxiously over the indicator when the screw of the 'Atlanta' was marking 90 revolutions by the engineer's chronometer. He smiled a rather forced smile, I thought, and scratched a match to light his cigar. At 95 he bit off the end—the butt, by the way—and got the match near his face just as the screw touched par—I mean 100 revolutions. Then his match went out At 105 he bit off the other end, and when the engineer crowded on more steam, and the screw crept to 110, he was scratching away at the sides of the engine room trying to ignite his nickel match safe. All this time his eyes were divided in their observation between the chronometer and the indicator. The latter registered 115 when he discovered the condition of his cigar, and hastily substituting another from his pocket, this time without biting off either end. Then came the funny part of the performance. He lit half a dozen matches, one after another, and held them at arm's length, each time until they burned down to the fingers, puffing away meanwhile with the greatest apparent enjoyment. As the screw struck 125, his ship making fifteen at every whirl, he heaved a sigh of grest satisfaction muttered as if to himself, 'She'll do,' and pitched his unlighted cigar, matches, safe and all over the bulwarks. Then he walked out of the engine room, and I don't believe he has missed that smoke to the present day."—Charles Hull Buttsford, in the Manhattan for October.

Anecdote of Aaron Burr.

In New York City a few weeks ago died Miss Theodosia Burr Davis in her seventy-seventh year, only sister of Col. Geo. T. M. Davis, well known to some of the older residents of St. Louis and formerly a prominent member of the bar, aid-de-camp of Gen James Shields in the Mexican war, and in 1849-51 edited a newspaper in this city. Miss Davis was a lady of brilliant and highly cultivated intellect, fine conversational powers and remarkable energy. Though tried by disappointment and sorrow as few have been, she retained her vivacity and wit to the last, while by a life which was in most respects one long self-sacrifice she won and kept the esteem and affection of a large circle of relatives and friends. Her virtues, however, were so entirely domestic and private, that the only excuse for this notice is the fact that she was indirectly connected with a historical personage in whom the public is always interested. The father of Miss Davis died young, and she was left to the guardianship of his brother, Matthew L Davis, the intimate friend and biographer of Arron Burr—one of that little band of divoted adherents who never abandoned their unfortunate chief, who were known in those days as "Burr's Tenth Legion." Though she bore the name of his idolized daughter, and was the niece and ward of a man so closely associated with him, Miss Davis never saw Burr but twice. Their first meeting made a profound impression upon her, as well it might. She was at her uncle's house, spending a portson of a school vacation, when one morning, when she was up stairs, he called her to come down as there was a visitor who wished to see her. For some reason she never could explain, she had an undefinable dread of this unknown visitor, and did not at once obey the summons. It was repeated with emphasis, which put an end to further hesitation and she came down. Mr. Davis took her by the hand and they entered the parlor. There she saw, sitting on the sofa, a little man, dressed in the fashion of a past generation, with hair as white as snow, and eyes so lustrous and piercing that she could not resist their fascination. With stately courtesy of the ancient regime, her uncle led her toward the stranger, and said: "Colonel Burr, this is the child of whom I spoke; I need not tell you whose name she bears." The old man arose, grasped both her hands in his, held her at arm's length, gazing into her face with those marvelous eyes as if he would read her very soul. The ordeal lasted but a moment, though it seemed an age to the timid girl; then her hands were dropped, and Burr exclaimed in a faltering voice: "Take her away, Matthew, I cannot stand it!" Once afterward they met accidentally on Broadway. She hurried past without speaking, but Burr stopped, and as she looked around she saw his eyes following in a long, wistful gaze, as if they would draw back to him the bearer of that beloved name.—St. Louis Republican

Making a Start.

"I am on my way East, and have about three hours in which to see Detroit," said a stranger yesterday to a Policeman on Jefferson avenue. "I want to begin right. Now, then, you of course have the finest fire department in the country?"

"Yes sir."

"Ah! exactly—exactly. And the best police force?"

"Yes."

"Just as I expected—exactly. This is, of course, one of the healthiest cities in the world?"

"It is."

"Ah—yes. You have a noble river at your doors."

"We have sir"

"Exactly—I presumed as much. You have churches and schools for all, of course?"

"Yes, sir."

"Exactly—of course. Taxes are low the local government efficient, and law and order prevail in all directions?"

"Yes."

"I suppose so—yes. The city is improving and is certain to become a great metropolis?"

"That is what we think."

"Of course—of course. You have pure air, good water and freedom from epidemics?"

"Yes, sir."

"Exactly—exactly, just as I supposed. They said the same thing in Buffalo, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago, Indianapolis and Milwaukee. If you will now have the kindness to direct me to a five cent barber shop I will enjoy a shave and then see the city. With the start you have given me I cannot fail to do you justice."—Detroit Free Press.

A Word of Warning.

Numerous suits have recently been instituted by us in New York City against parties for selling what they claimed to be Hostetter's Stomach Bitters in bulk, and also for refilling the second-hand Hostetter Bitter bottles with spurious stuff and selling it out by the dose or otherwise a number of which suits have been settled by the defendants paying damages and costs, and allowing a decree of perpetual injunction to be taken; others of the said suits are now being prosecuted, and as we never fail to convict, as the court records of St. Louis, New Orleans and other points fully affirm, we give this friendly warning for the benefit of any who may be following the nefarious business of preying on the well earned reputation of our preparation, by palming off on the public a spurious article purporting to be genuine, as we will most assuredly call them to account, when, perhaps, they may the least expect it.

Notice to purchasers Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is never sold by the quart, gallon, keg or barrel, but only in bottles, on each of which is found two tables, one of which contains a steel engraved representation of St George and Dragon, with fac-simile of our note of hand below a shield, also the cork coverad either witha U. S. Proprietary Revenue Stamp, fastened to the sides of neck of bottle, or since congress abolished the use of stamp, July 1, 1883, a metal cap with the words "Dr J. BAKING POWDER FIGURES THAT DON'T LIE.

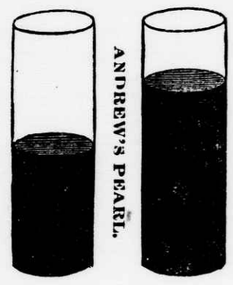
The Royal Baking Powder Co. try to give the inference that their powder contains more CREAM TARTAR and that its LEAVENING POWER is greater than any other made, as stated in their advertisement on the "Comparative worth of Baking Powders," exhibited by black lines. Our name was mentioned in connection with one of our cheaper brands, made of different materials as the trade might demand. Our CREAM TARTAR brand of ANDREW'S PEARL was omitted, evidently for a very good reason, judging from the RELATIVE MERITS of ANDREW'S "PEARL" and the Royal, as clearly demonstrated by the Government Chemist, Dr. PETER COLLIER, of the Department of Agriculture, at Washington, from samples received by him from dealers who furnished the samples from their stocks on hand in open market.

Showing excess of Cream Tartar in Andrews' Pearl over Royal, ascertained by Government Chemist Collier.



Dr. Collier's Analysis.

U. S. DEPT. OF AGRICULTURE,
WASHINGTON, D. C., March 10, 1883.

C. A. ANDREWS & Co.—Gentlemen. I received by express from Thos. Lydon and J. P Harkins & Co., Grand Ave., Milwaukee, and Harper Bros., Chicago, Ill., samples of Andrew's Pearl and Royal Baking Powders. The cans were in good condition when received and the seals unbroken. I find upon analysis that Andrew's Pearl Baking Powder contains about four and a half (4½) percent "more cream tartar" than the Royal Baking powder, and a "proportionately larger percentage of carbonic acid gas, and I find it to be free from alum, and any injurious substances.

Sincerely yours,
PETER COLLIER,
U. S. Chemist, Dept. of Agriculture.

Government Chemist Collier's Analysis as to the Leavening Qualities.

ANDREWS' PEARL [redacted]
ROYAL - - - - - - - [redacted]

No wonder the Royal Co. omitted Andrew's Pearl from their "Comparative List" as Government Chemist Collier's analysis shows conclusively two things: 1st, That Andrew's Pearl contains "more cream tartar" than the Royal, as shown by the cuts above; 2d, That the Leavening Power of Andrew's Pearl is "greater" than the Royal, as shown by the two black lines above.

CHALLENGE.

We will give the Royal Co. or any one else $1,000 or $5,000 if they can prove by any fair mutual test that Andrews Pearl Baking Powder does, or ever did, contain alum or any injurious substances, and this challenge is open forever. Andrews' Pearl Baking Powder is sustained by testimonials as to its "purity and strength" by the only genuine commissioned Government chemist such as the Royal Co. "never" have published. TRY IT.
