THE GAZETTE.

FRIDAY MORNING, OCTOBER 1, 1858

THE HOUSE OF COMMONS AND THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House of Representatives is the "big show" of Washington. If the Union were to collapse, or the seat of Government to be removed, folks would all die of ennui; there would be no lounging-place, no resort for criticisers of beauty and dress, no lobby in which to take "our member" by the button-hole. The reason why enterprising theatrical managers don't get hold of our extra change, is because we like the "big theatre" at the Capitol so much better. Besides, the latter don't cost us anything—but patience. When we wish to see a tragedy, we go to hear honorable gentlemen "do the agony" of "bleeding Kansas." If we prefer a farce, we also go to the House; for there we can be amused by a continual farce, acted by two hundred and thirty five members.

The English have also their "big show," upon which we give the comments of a well-known American editor:

"The House of Commons never loses its interest for me. It governs England although England is a monarchy. It is common for Americans to speak of the disorder that is supposed to prevail during its sessions; but this is a great mistake. I remember reading some letters in one of the New York religious journals last summer, from a distinguished clergyman of your city, in which the impression conveyed was that our House of Representatives was far superior to the House of Commons in the order and decorum of its proceedings. Yet the only point which he specified in the alleged contrast was that English legislators sit with their hats on, while our members do not. But I have seen members of our House of Representatives, while the House was in session, with their feet upon the desks in front of them—and considerably higher than their heads—this seems to me a more unbecoming and indecorous attitude than sitting with one's hat on. Hats are removed in the presence of superiors, but in Parliament every member is supposed to be upon a footing of equality with every other; whether one sits covered or uncovered, therefore is a matter of mere convenience.—None but a member would be allowed to wear his hat for a moment. Indeed no one but a member is ever allowed upon the floor or in the seats of the House. It is a breach of privilege for any one not entitled to it to take a seat upon the floor while the House is in session. Whenever one rises to go out, he bows to the Speaker as he passes his chair. There is no running about the House, conversing with members, reading newspapers or writing letters, while a debate is going on. Respectful attention is always paid to any speaker who has anything to say—though if one were to attempt to read an hour's speech upon things in general, without the slightest reference to the question before the body, he would undoubtedly find himself interrupted by cries of "question" and "divide, divide, divide," from all parts of the House.

In our House of Representatives nothing is more common than for a member to be reading or making a speech to which not a solitary person in the House is even pretending to pay the slightest attention—members walking about, conversing in groups, reading, writing or sleeping, or rapping for messengers to carry off carr-loads of documents for their constituents. A spectator looking on from the gallery finds it impossible to detect any appearance of anything like business in the confused scene before him; and it is only when some attentive doorkeeper points out to him the only person on the floor who is standing still, that he begins to understand that a debate is going on. Nothing like this can happen in the House of Commons. Members, in the first place, sit upon plain benches—not in arm chairs—and have neither desk nor table before them. They are compelled, therefore, to attend to what is going on, since they have no conveniences for doing anything else. Whenever a member is speaking, he must either be heard or stopped. If he talks common sense, and seems to be doing his best, he is heard attentively; if he is an intolerable bore, he is very speedily "taken down." The practice of expressing assent or dislike of what is said, prevails in the House, but under considerable restraint. None but members are indulged in it to begin with. If applause or hisses were to come from the spectators' galleries, they would be cleared very promptly. But the House itself is frequently in a buzz, members applauding what is said, or whispering censure of it.—These manifestations grow palpably out of the interest felt in the discussion, and are not forced or affected. They seem, therefore, to help forward a debate, instead of interrupting it—as speakers always take their cue, more or less, from these indications of the temper with which their remarks are received.

What strikes an American most in contrasting or comparing the proceedings of the House of Commons with those of our House of Representatives, is the business-like air and manner of the former. Whenever a question comes up it is debated. The speeches are made upon the subject under discussion, and they are alternately from friends and opponents of the measure in question. One advocates it, and is answered by another, who, in turn, is replied to, and so the discussion proceeds to its close. In our House, as every body knows, such a debate is almost unknown. We have either long speeches, made for constituents and for political effect, or else personal passages, which degenerate into wrangles. These are serious defects in a legislative body, and ought to be remedied. It seems to me that the writing desks, the hour rule, and the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, have contributed very largely to the existing state of things."

I INVITE CITIZENS and strangers to call at my manufactory No. 141, King street, between Washington and St. Asaph streets, and examine my large and handsome assortment of SADDLERY GOODS, as I do not intend to be surpassed in my line of business, by any other city. I have on hand, and am daily manufacturing as fine and superior an assortment, as can be found in any of the Northern cities. My stock comprises as great a variety as can be found in any other house, consisting of HARNESS, of all kinds, from the fine quilt work down to the dray, cart, and plow Harness—TRUNKS, of every kind, the SOLE LEATHER, Steel Spring Iron frame Ladies TRUNKS AND BONNET BOXES, and all other kinds down to the common packing Trunks; SADDLES, BRIDLES, MARTINGALES, WHIPS, &c., as fine as the finest; Buffalo and fancy ROBES, DRIVING GLOVES, HORSE COVERS, CARPET BAGS, VALICES, &c., &c., of all kinds. Call and see for yourselves.

Thankful for the very liberal patronage heretofore extended, solicit a continuance of the same, and I pledge myself to spare no pains to give satisfaction. All GOODS warranted to be as represented. WM. F. PADGETT.
