WEDNESDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 13.

ANCIENT COFFINS OPENED.—The trustees of the old Stone Burial Ground in Cranston, Rhode Island, on the Pontiac road, a few miles Southwest of Elmwood, have recently removed the remains of three of their ancestors to that place—Job Stone (4), his wife, Hannah Barnes, and his second wife, Abigail Foster. The bones were in an entire state of preservation. The man had been buried 107 years; the first wife 154 years, and the second wife 106 years.—Hannah Barnes, buried in 1712, was a little girl at the decease of Roger Williams, and died when between thirty and forty years of age, and yet the skeleton was as sound and perfect as if cleansed and kept in a case; the hair also, braided, wound up in a coil, as sound and perfect as on the day on which she was laid down to sleep, although one hundred and fifty years have passed away. Her descendants are and have been more than two thousand; more than half that number are now living. These bodies were buried from five and a half to six feet deep, on a small ridge of land on a branch of the Pochasset river, the bottom of the grave, some seven or eight feet above the level of the branch, in a bluish, sandy clay.—Providence Journal.

The New York Times complains of the log-rolling between Western members who want a plethoric currency, and the Eastern members who want a high tariff, by which both objects are gained over a majority opposed to each. It says:

"During the voting, it appears the Western expansionists feelingly addressed the Eastern contractionists in this style: "If New England, &c., don't help us on this, we'll give them Hail Columbia on their tariff, when it comes in."
