Alexandria Gazette

TUESDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 4.

REGULARITY OF HABITS.—Very few persons understand how greatly health and happiness in this world depend upon regularity of their daily habits. The constant recurrence of those events which we are apt to refer to as tiresome and monotonous. During the earlier and latter periods of our life this "even tenor" is essential to our well-being; and though we may feel like kicking the traces when at a month of power and activity, and sometimes fly off at tangents or get rid of our superfluous energies in odd and eccentric ways, yet we usually come back, or at least try to come back to our mooring, and gladly accept the tread mill path of daily duty, which of itself brings necessities of pleasure, leaves no remorse.

Every one can understand how disagreeable it would be not to be able to make sure of one's dinner; to be deprived of bed and sleep; to lose the enjoyment of abundance of good water and a daily paper, but upon the recurrence of many more and much smaller minutiæ do we depend for our daily comfort. We like certain kinds of bread at every meal; we want meat always cooked certain favorite ways and expect to find it so as naturally as we expect the sun to shine. We get to seeing certain things in certain places, and we could not miss them upon any account; a tree, a bush, a picture, or a chair which occupies the same place for years acquires a value to our conciousness which only the habit of seeing it can give it. The world seems very large in growth, and full of many and varied interests, but it contracts as we grow older, and the objects of value to us narrow themselves down to those which we know to be real, and which form our lives. Naturally, as these grow fewer in number they grow dearer, and the more we dislike to miss them from our sight and sense. No lives are so happy as those which are so well ordered that there is little to resign, and to which, therefore, every year brings added interest and added enjoyment in the regular discharge of individual and social duty.
