THURSDAY EVENING, APRIL 7.

THE SCIENCE OF KISSING — Science, in the last few years, says the New Orleans Times, has gained a terrible foothold in this world. It has rattled the dry bones of old fogyism, made pi out of worn out theories, upset ideas which have been established for centuries. The latest and most astonishing fact that has been developed is that there is a scientific mode of kissing. The day when a young man could grab a girl around the neck and golthe a kiss in a rough but considerable manner, is past. The time when he could encircle her waist with one arm, get his spare room full of hair oil, and pirouette his lips over every square inch of her countenance, is no more. Science has proclaimed against it, and man shudders but remains silent. The old style of kissing, which sounds like some one testing a clapboard off a smokehouse, is now considered bad taste, and consequently going out of fashion, although the majority of girls admit that science has cruelly destroyed all the comfort of a long lingering, heart thrilling kiss, and causes them to express no mild regret at the change. The improved scientific method of kissing is to throw the right arm tenderly around the fair one's shoulder, tilt her chin up with the left hand, until her face is pointed at an angle of forty five degrees—or, rather, until it has an aspect resembling the bowsprit of a clipper built sloop. Then stoop softly and graze about her lips in a quiet, subdued sort of a way, tickle her nose with your mustache until she cries, "Ouch!" This is scientific kissing; but there is no consolation in it—nothing to make a man feel like a couple of galvanic butterflies were galloping along his spinal column. It is flat—lukewarm; it lacks substance, and if not stale, it is at least unprofitable.
