A Horrible Mahommedan Rite.

Mr. E Griffin writes from Alexandria, Egypt, to the New York Observer, as follows: The anniversary of the birth of the Prophet is generally observed by the Moslems of Egypt. They do it by keeping a festival of a whole week, giving to this week the name of the Birth, or the time of the birth. Their feasting, however, is largely of a religious character—that is, all the spectacles of the week are generally connected with religion. These always take place in the open air or in tents, erected in some wide, open space on the outskirts of the city.

Cairo is the stronghold of Islam to Egypt, and the Mooulid, or natal festival there, is much the most noted one. Its crowning performance, the Dosa, or trampling, is not observed elsewhere, and annually attracts a vast concourse to witness this triumph of fanaticism and barbarity. A space of twenty-five or thirty acres is selected for the tents. The ground was rather in the form of a basin, with a level space in the center. All the streets leading to these grounds were closely lined on each side with small tents, filled with colored candies and brilliantly lighted with many lanterns. Within the grounds there were hundreds of tents with rows of lanterns hung along the "ridge poles" and across the open fronts, and here and there were pavilions, tents and various pretty designs merely outlined with ropes and then hung with lanterns at regular intervals. The effect at a little distance was as if the designs had been made with stars.

The Dosa always takes place at 1 o'clock p. m., as the sheikh and the devotees must arrive in the great mosque precisely at noon, the sheikh continuing long enough for the devotees to reach the ground and take position before his arrival. The devotees appeared in a body, chanting and swaying their bodies as if unable to be still. Friends accompanied them and assisted them to stand. The impression they desire to make is that they are in a religious frenzy through the fervor of their faith and the intensity of their devotions to the mosque. But unbelievers roundly assert that a large part of the devotees consist in getting themselves well under the influence of hasheesh. They were laid one by one in the middle of the street, their faces downward, resting on their arms, and as closely packed as possible. We supposed they numbered between three and four hundred. All of them belonged to the lowest classes of society, and this remark will apply to any Moslem procession that I have ever seen. Our carriage driver said he had "lain down" three times.

The horse which the sheikh rides is kept for purpose for this use. The greatest care and attention is lavished upon him, and his sacred back never bears any other rider. He was about the ordinary size and in very fine condition. Many attendants accompanied the sheikh. He held the reins, but was firmly held in the saddle by two or three grasping firmly on each side. He was an old man, and one might have supposed his neck broken from the manner in which his head rolled from side to side. This is to indicate that his thoughts are in heaven, that his elevation of soul is overpowering his body. When he reached the end of the line of devotees there was some delay. When all was in readiness, two men supported the sheikh and four men took hold of the bridle, two on each side, and literally pulled the unwilling animal over the backs of the victims. Sometimes his feet would slip between the bodies, and then the rocking of the old sheik was painful to see. Just as soon as the horse passed, those who had been trampled were jerked up and carried off into the tents. If their faith is strong, they cannot be hurt, but some of these cried out in great pain, and were immediately cursed by Moslem bystanders for infidels. It is a horrible sight, which few wish to witness a second time. And when I looked over the 25,000 persons who had given it the countenance and encouragement of their presence, I felt conscience-stricken that we had swelled the number.

The Dosa is a mere tradition, not commanded in the Koran. Moslems say that when Mohammed was flying from Mecca to Medina, he was so closely pursued that he could not have escaped had not his followers lain down and allowed him to ride over them. Perhaps not many believe this tradition, but the honor of Islam would be impugned if it were not every year repeated in their great city.

ADVERTISEMENTS ARE NEWS.—Good, fresh advertisements are not the least interesting and valuable portion of a newspaper. We have been told that a prominent New York journalist hoped to see the day when the profession of the circulation of his paper would be so large that he could dispense with advertising altogether. We think he is mistaken in his opinion of advertising and newspapers. Advertisements are news. They tell the readers what they want to know—where goods can be bought what they are selling for, who has houses to rent or sell, who wishes to purchase real estate, where employment and labor can be obtained and a thousand other things that they want to know. It is an error to suppose that only the editors and reporters supply news worth reading. The skillful advertiser furnishes a good share of it, and if there are any readers who fail to look over the advertising columns of their paper, they miss a great deal of information that would prove valuable to them.—Albany Press.
