A CLERK'S FIGHT FOR LIFE.

Waged with Desperate Robbers in a Dark Basement.

One Miscreant Overpowered When the Other Came to His Aid.

CHICAGO, Sept. 11.—Harr. Warner, night clerk in the drug store of E. A. Holroyd, Eighteenth street and Wabash avenue, had a terrible struggle for his life early yesterday morning with two daring robbers.

He was shot in the mouth and then beaten on the head with billies until the thieves left him for dead. He was found lying in a pool of blood unconscious. The cash register in the store had been rifled and an attempt made to rob the safe. From Warner the thieves took $20, after he had been beaten into insensibility.

The clerk was awakened by a night call, and admitted two men. After lighting the gas he was confronted with a revolver and ordered to hold up his hands, and on complying one of the robbers told him to put his hands in a rope loop held before him.

Warner inserted only one of his hands. With the other he made a drive at the robber's face, knocking him over backward, and he rolled down the stairs to the bottom, in the basement. As he fell he kept hold of the rope, and the loop tightened on Warner's wrist. The clerk was dragged down with him, and when they landed at the bottom Warner was on top.

The basement was pitch dark, and for five minutes Warner struggled bravely for his life against terrible odds. Warner was getting the best of the robber, when the other, who had a bandaged hand, came to his companion's aid, her closed his teeth on the ear of his assailant and bit off a large piece. He was getting the best of the one robber, when the other, who had a bandaged hand, came to his companion's aid.

The second robber struck Warner over the head with a billy, and while the clerk lay dazed from the blow a revolver was thrust into his mouth and discharged. Fortunately the bullet struck a tooth, which changed its course, and it drilled a hole in Warner's cheek. The leaden missile went clear through his cheek and imbedded itself in the floor of the basement.

The two desperadoes then beat Warner over the head with short, loaded clubs until they supposed he was dead. They left him lying in the basement and escaped, after robbing the place, through the door by which they had entered.

GLADSTONE DENOUNCED.

Irish League Wants a Great Convention to Declare Independence.

The Executive Committee of the Irish National League of America has issued a manifesto in regard to the Home Rule bill. In it Mr. Gladstone is denounced as a hypocrite. He is accused of linking an unpopular Local Option bill and other measures to Home Rule.

A great convention of Irishmen is proposed, and a suggestion made to proclaim Ireland's independence. This is to be done through a plan adopted for united action.

The circular further states:

"The bill submitted to the House of Commons was practically useless. The imposition on our country of a mutilated skeleton that rejected by the House of Lords would have been an outrage and the serfs who would accept it with thanks would merit the scorn of the nation. It was a sorry spectacle—Ireland, after her struggle of centuries, on her knees for a crumb."

Under the influence of Gladstone, it is alleged the spirit of Irish nationality is being destroyed, "through a designing agency Ireland is to be in reality a West Britain. The retirement of Gladstone at the next election is predicted. The circular is signed by President M. V. Gannon, J. P. Sutton, Secretary, and William Lyman, Treasurer.

THE TELEPHONE AT SEA.

Prof. Blake's Successful Method of Marine Communication.

LAWRENCE, Kan., Sept. 11.—Lucius I. Blake, professor of electricity in the Kansas State University, has returned from the East, where he has been experimenting with his invention for communicating between ship and sea. He devoted himself this Summer to endeavoring to connect the lightship at Pollock's Rip, in Vineyard Sound, with the main land by telephone, and last week the official test was made and Prof. Blake's method accepted.

The experiment will prove of untold value to commerce, as fleeting vessels will be reported at New York twenty four hours earlier than is now possible.

MEXICAN TARIFF CHANGES.

Reductions Projected That Should Benefit American Trade.

CITY OF MEXICO, Sept. 5.—El Universal says it is certain that the Ministers are studying a project for reducing the duties on imports. Some forty articles will be affected, and the alterations should give a great impulse to American trade with this Republic. The tariff at present is practically prohibitive, as far as many articles are concerned.

The election troubles at Coahuila are practically at an end. Gov. Cal. Garza Golan having withdrawn his candidature. Many lives have been lost in election riots.

GILROY IS WRATHY.

Denies He Is to Be Escorted by Military to a "Show."

Mayor Gilroy denounced this morning the attempt to use him as an advertisement for a spectacular show.

The announcement was made in a morning paper that the Mayor was to be the guest of honor at the opening of the military tournament in Madison Square Garden to-night. The report further said that he was to be escorted from his house through the streets by the "Royal Irish Lancers," who are to take part in the performance.

"There is not one syllable of truth in the statement from beginning to end," said Mr. Gilroy to an "Evening World" reporter.

"I have not been invited to attend the show, and would not accept the invitation if tendered.

"Furthermore, I would not accept an escort of any body of men to go anywhere. I go to the theatre without military escort."

INCENDIARIES AT RED BANK.

Valentine's House Burned and a Neighbor's Narrowly Escapes.

RED BANK, N. J., Sept. 11.—Incendiaries continue their nefarious work in this section. At 5 o'clock this morning a house on Irving street, owned by Rev. Henry Belling and occupied by Peter Valentine, a boatman, was discovered to be on fire.

Mrs. Nicholas Wilson, who lives next door, smelled the smoke and aroused her husband. He put the fire out.

The fire communicated to the house of James Cooper, jr., on the east, and this was saved by the firemen.

Neither the Valentine nor Cooper families was home. Valentine's furniture was completely destroyed. The house was damaged to the extent of $1,500.

The family left home yesterday, and the fire was undoubtedly of incendiary origin.

LONGER LIFE-SAVING SERVICE.

A Bill in the Senate Designed to Secure It.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 11.—Mr. Dixon, of Rhode Island, has introduced into the Senate a bill amending the laws governing the life saving stations by providing that hereafter the stations on the sea and gulf shall be manned and the stations opened for active service on the first day of August and so continued until the first day of June succeeding; and upon the lake coast from the opening to the close of navigation, except such stations as in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury are not necessary to be manned during the full period specified, and the crews shall reside at the stations during such periods.

Under this bill the term of service of the life saving crews will be lengthened one month each at the beginning and end of the season.

MIRIAM'S MISTAKE.

A Woman's Sacrifice to Avenge a Cousin's Wrong.

The bathers on the beach had clasped hands to breast an inrolling wave; the band was playing on the breezy porches of the hotel; grand equipages whirled over the glittering sands; a ship in full sail was visible in the channel; the sun was sinking into the water line of the horizon.

"Miriam," Brice Ventnor said, his voice husky, his manner agitated, "I have the right to ask your reason for this rejection."

He was looking at her with so much directness that she did not care to have her eyes meet his.

"No, you have not," she replied, the color coming and going in her face. "Still I'll tell you. I am prompted by revenge."

"By revenge?"

"Yes," was her measured reply. "I want you to suffer."

"And you enjoy it? Then you know how much I love you, it seems. I always knew you did not question that."

They had been seated on a bench outside a small pavilion, but were now standing. She was suffering more than she would have cared to have him know, and was impatient to get away.

"Pray, in what way have I wronged you?" he asked. "Not in thought, word or act. I consider myself the soul of honor."

"Oh, you do?" and she laughed mockingly. "Instead, you are a man without principle."

He groaned aloud in his powerful effort to repress his angry indignation.

"I am not avenging myself, but another," she said, speaking with rapidity. "Did you ever know Blanche Carroll? Oh, it is not necessary for me to remind you of your baseness."

When Miriam Gray reached her room at the hotel, reaction set in, and her great grief showed how devotedly she loved the man whom she insulted. She flung herself upon the bed and cried as if her heart were broken.

"Oh, Blanche!" she exclaimed aloud between her hysterical sobs, "you are avenged, but you will never know what it has cost me. Oh, why was I to love him so passionately before I heard about his perfidy?"

Early though it was, she retired to bed, but it was almost dawn before she fell asleep, so intense was her suffering.

* * * * * * *

Three years later again found Miriam Gray at the seashore. She had not met Brice Ventnor during that interval, nor had she heard from him.

She was as handsome as ever and more royal in her manners, but her face and conversation lacked brilliancy. She was more quiet and reserved, more chary in her friendships, ready to suspect and heartily tired of the hollowness of fashionable life.

Her love affair with Brice Ventnor had caused the change. In punishing him for his perfidy to her cousin Blanche she had sacrificed herself. She could never love another man as she had loved him.

As she was one day walking on the beach with her cousin Blanche they suddenly came upon Brice Ventnor. He was alone and stood still for a minute, the meeting was so unexpected to him. The board walk was so high and narrow just there, and the ladies could not get away.

He lifted his hat, looked mournfully and reproachfully at Miriam, as if half inclined to speak, then sprang from the walk and strode toward the nearest pavilion.

Miriam recognized him and was touched at the look he had bestowed upon her.

"Who was that superb looking gentleman?" asked her cousin Blanche. "Did he bow to you or me?"

Receiving no reply, she looked up into her companion's face.

"Why, Miriam, how pale you are," she exclaimed, "and how agitated."

"Blanche, do you mean to say that you do not know this man?" asked Miriam, her voice a mere whisper.

"I never saw him until to-day," was her cousin's reply.

"Oh!" cried Miriam, catching her breath, one hand unconsciously clinched. "Is he not the man who trifled with you?"

"Brice Ventnor?" exclaimed Blanche. "Why, no, child."

The blood receded from Miriam's lips, and a low moan escaped from them. She grew so weak for a little while that she was forced to lean heavily upon Blanche, who conducted her to one of the rustic benches. She fanned her, rubbed her hands, and spoke to her in soothing tones. When her cousin had sufficiently recovered, she said:

"Miriam, what is this mystery?"

"Oh, I am so afraid that I have wronged that—man and—myself. I was cruel to him, for I supposed that I was avenging you. His name is Brice Ventnor."

"Eh!" exclaimed Blanche, who was beginning to comprehend. "He is not the Brice Ventnor that I knew," and her voice shook with emotion. "Can it be that there are two gentlemen of the same name? I remember hearing him say that he had some cousins. Oh, I am so sorry, and so—so—glad."

Miriam Gray looked at her friend in a sort of stupor.

"Sorry, dear, because of what you have suffered and glad because everything will yet come out all right."

Miriam mournfully shook her head.

"He will never forgive me," she said. "He is proud and sensitive. My words cut deep, all the more so because undeserved. I gave him no explanation—no chance to defend himself."

"You can explain now," suggested Blanche.

"No," replied Miriam in a strained tone, a proud look coming to her face.

She wring her hands and moaned, and nothing that Blanche could say carried consolation with it. Her love had been but dormant—it reasserted itself. Brice Ventnor had been blameless. She had deeply wronged him. She was paying the penalty for her haste.

"I would tell him all," advised Blanche.

"He may spurn me," cried Miriam through her sobs. "He may be as cruel and unreasonable as I was and with more of an excuse. It happened three years ago. He may love some one else now; nay, he may be married to another. There is nothing for me to do but to remain silent and—endure."

Her grief was so great that Blanche ceased her efforts to pacify her.

* * * * * * *

The orchestra was playing a quadrille, the dancers were gliding gracefully to and fro, lights flashed, diamonds sparkled, fans glittered, eyes beamed. Miriam Gray sat on the veranda by an open window looking at the dancers, her face and form plainly visible. A gentleman stepped from among the shadows on the porch. He stopped beside Miriam.

"Miriam," he simply said, though his voice trembled.

Ah! she knew who had spoken. No one else could have pronounced her name with such sweet tenderness. The blood filled her face, then left it deadly pale.

She lifted her eyes swiftly to his, a fond, glad, appealing look in them.—Amusing Journal.

BRUTALLY BEAT HIS FATHER.

Walsh's Celebration of His Birthday May End in Murder.

Patrick Walsh, aged twenty-one, of 104 East One Hundred and Second street, was held in the Harlem Police Court this morning, to await the result of injuries inflicted upon his father, William J. Walsh.

To celebrate his birthday yesterday Patrick got drunk, and, returning home at midnight, began smashing things in general, not forgetting his aged father. The police were summoned and arrested Pat, but at the station-house his father relented and secured his release.

Half an hour after his return home, neighbors were aroused by terrible screams, and, rushing into the house, found Pat beating his father with a stool-leg. He was arrested again, and Dr. E. C. Kelly, who was called in, pronounced his father dangerously injured.
