A Female Shylock.

A most disgusting exhibition of inhumanity and grasping love of money was displayed in Judge Hunt's Court yesterday afternoon during the hearing of a habeas corpus case to obtain possession of little Adam Cohn. It seems that the child had been forcibly kept away from his dying mother, notwithstanding her pleadings, and Rabbi Messing, touched with the poor woman's tale, had sworn out the writ. The bailiff of the court was sent with an order for Annie Hickert's arrest. In an hour or so he returned with a tall, raw boned woman, clad in an old time plaid silk dress, that had probably not seen the light of day for a score of years. A dilapidated red shawl completed the attire, and made the tall, gaunt figure seem gigantic. In her arms, squeezed tightly to her, was a pretty little boy, about two years and a half old. She was mad. Every nerve was in a tremor and her head jerked from side to side as if on a pivot. Her eyes snapped and her mouth worked convulsively. The first question was asked if she refused to give up the child. Yes, she did, unless she had money—money. Rabbi Messing was placed upon the stand to make out a case. He, in a graphic manner, told how Lena Cohn, a beautiful young Jewess, lay, deserted by her husband, upon her death-bed, expecting almost any minute to cross over the dark river; how she continually cried for her little one, that she might fondle it once again to her bosom before taking a last farewell, and how this woman refused to let the child pass for one instant from her care unless $300, claimed to be due for nursing the sick woman, were paid her. He had, he said, agreed to assume the guardianship of the child and see to its religious training, while on the other hand the cap or of the child threatened to alienate it from its people. The woman was then made to take the stand, which she did, still clutching the child.

"Don't you know," questioned the Judge, "that this poor mother wishes to see her child?"

"Yes," muttered the woman.

"Why don't you let her have it, then?"

"Because I'm a widow and have no time to waste with her," she snapped.

"But why keep the child?

"Because the mother wanted me to. I spent $100 on her."

"But," said the Judge, "if you knew the mother was dying and that she yearned to see her child would you not allow her to?"

The woman pondered a moment, then sullily answered. "No."

"Why?" asked His Honor.

"Because," said the woman, "she owes me money."

"Is that the only reason?" persisted the Judge.

"Yes; I want my money," shrieked the woman.

"But, my good woman," asked the Judge, "you must have some affection for the child that leads you to wish to keep it?

"No; I only like my money."

The bystanders were horrified at the attempt of the woman to hold the child for a debt against a dying woman, especially after she had sued and had been beaten in the courts; and more especially at the hardheartedness displayed. The Judge made out an order to deliver the child into the Rabbi's custody, and when she understood that her sweet revenge was balked she became a fury.

"And won't anybody pay me?" she shrieked. Then she moaned out, "Oh, isn't this hard to take the brat from me and not pay me any money?" Even then she refused to give up the child, and it was found best to allow her to clutch the little one in her arms until they could go to the dying mother.—From the San Francisco Call.

A GREAT ENGINEERING FEAT.—The St. Gothard tunnel is open for the passage of trains. It is one of the greatest engineering feats of the century. It cost $57,890,000, of which Italy paid as a subsidy $11,000,000. Germany $6,000,000 and Switzerland $5,600,000. The work was begun in 1872, in the fall, and the tunnel was completed in February, 1880—four and a-half years less than was required to build the Mont Cenis tunnel. During the progress of the enterprise the laborers in the tunnel suffered from a mysterious disease that long baffled all physicians; but an Italian physician, Dr. Giaccone, finally traced it, with the aid of microscopic investigation, to parasitic worms that were engendered by the underground atmosphere, and lodged in the intestines of men working in it. A Swiss physician, Dr. Sonderegge, supplemented this discovery by devising a method of expelling the parasites. The tunnel is one section of a railroad running from Lake Lucerne in Switzerland to Lake Maggiore in Italy. The tunnel proper begins at Goeschenen, in a defile where the river Reuss dashes beneath the famous Devil's Bridge, and ends at Airolo, where it overlooks the pleasant pastoral valley of the Tisino. Its length is nine and a-third miles, or 48 936 feet, to be exact; it is 19½ feet high and 26 feet in maximum width.
