Unostentatious and Useful.

Suitable for either library or living room, this combination bookcase and writing desk must commend itself for its many useful properties.

The wood is the best sawn quartered oak, which in its fine graining adds greatly to its artistic merits.

There is at the top an oval mirror made of the finest French bevelled plate glass, and underneath the desk, a most useful adjunct, a chiffonier. Often the writer desires to refer to a book, and then the close proximity of the bookshelf enables him to do so more readily.

Why hesitate to invest $20.00 when such advantages bespeak their own praise?

$20.00.

CONSTABULARY IN IRELAND.

Dangerous Work Sometimes Performed by the Unpopular Police.

For police purposes Ireland is divided into thirty-six counties and ridings, says the Saturday Review. Dublin has a police force of its own, while in Belfast and Cork a fixed force of the Royal Irish constabulary is maintained.

Each county is divided into districts numbering from two to twelve, and each district into sub-districts varying from three to sometimes as many as thirty, when temporary huts and special protection posts are reckoned.

Among sub-districts the various town lands are allotted, each of which has to be frequently patrolled by the police of the sub-district. The police stations, or barracks, as they are called, are generally five or ten miles apart, the strength of each being, on an average, one sergeant and four constables.

The duties to be performed are various. In addition to the ordinary police work they are charged with taking agricultural statistics, carrying out the provisions of the cattle diseases, customs, and illicit distillation acts, and attending fairs, markets, races and elections to preserve the peace.

But during the disturbed times they were almost wholly occupied in protecting process-servers and bailiffs, sheriffs executing writs, agents, landlords, farmers who had paid their rents, boycotted persons, and all persons obnoxious for some reason or other incomprehensible to any one outside the immediate neighborhood.

A dangerous and arduous duty was protecting Government note-takers at land-league meetings, dispersing proclaimed meetings, and suppressing riots. Again, at Orange and Nationalist anniversaries in Ulster, vast numbers of the Royal Irish constabulary are drafted from other parts of Ireland to prevent collisions when opposing factions meet.

On these occasions the police are stoned and maltreated with great energy by orange and green alike, and when they have recourse to the baton or the bayonet they are denounced and stoned with refreshing vigor by both sides.

HER PRECIOUS BASKET.

She Treasured It Soo Much to Let It Go Out of Her Reach.

A fat woman stopped a downbound Cold Spring car last night and climbed aboard as best she could. She was handicapped by her flesh and by a big market basket which she was carrying. The car was crowded and she had great difficulty in getting into the vestibule, says the Buffalo Express.

"Madam," said the conductor, "I can find a place for that basket down here."

"What's that?" she asked sharply.

"I say that I can find a place for that basket over here."

"Young man, I counte' stand'n' ting that basket go out of my hand."

"But you're blocking up the doorway with it there."

"I can't help that. I need it right here and my basket goes with me. If I set it down only I don't care to get out of my hands. The contents are fragile."

"But you must get it out of the way."

The fat woman sputtered and scolded and wound up by saying she would not put the basket down. She didn't get off the car, however, and when she did she had to squeeze by the conductor. Was an effort made to make her or her basket stay in the way? Not a little thing like a market basket.

"Madam," said the conductor, "I'm sure the fat woman and glasses will be perfectly safe over here in the corner."

"I don't believe it. I am afraid to trust it there. The contents of this basket are likely to get hurt down there under those men's feet."

And she stood there all the way from Bryant street to Swan, and every person who got on or off refused even to touch that basket. The men looked and the women said "Tsk, tsk!" and looked unutterable things. And the fat woman hung on to her basket.

When the car stopped at Swan street an undersized man was crowded into one corner of the vestibule and said:

"Excuse me, madam, but if you won't consider it impertinence, I would like to know what you have in that basket that you are guarding so closely."

The fat woman looked pleased. "Well," she said, "I don't mind tellin' you, seein' you inquired. They're a lot of old magazines that my daughter let me take to read."

And the conductor swore seven times under his breath, and then went out and said sarcastic things to the motorman.

WANTED HIS MONEY'S WORTH

The Despatch Was Meaningless to Al but His Wife.

A man, top heavy, says London Tid-Bits, walked into a telegraph office, seized a telegraph blank and a pen, and by propping himself against the counter, managed to write the following message:

"Kate: Won't be home till morning. Harry."

"What's that cost?" said the man, handing the message through the portholes to the manipulator of electricity.

"Let me count words, sixpence."

"Sixpence, eh? How much for ten words?"

"The same price; anything not exceeding ten words will cost you sixpence," the operator making the needle of an instrument that he was operating as if it had delirium tremens.

"I'm afraid to have the worth of my money in that," said the man, bracing himself against the counter as he traced a message on the paper with a pencil. "Suppose I say, 'Mr. Constantinople, consignees, Mr. Mudsettle, Assamma, Bengal. Shipment of opiocrome, hippopotamus, perpetuability, philippogenit-ure.' Mightn't that be wrong, and your wife and family starve with a book of learning in his stomach?"

The operator repeated the words, but the information that there was a mistake in his message and that he would have been ransacked for the longest word.

"I know there's no sense in it, but Kate will understand it all the same. She knows what I mean, pure anyway, when I send a message. I think, another time, sense or not, I made 'em long on purpose to break the back of your instrument. Shoot 'em in and start the clerk. I'm not for a good few days mind the expense. Here's your sixpence."

And the man ran out and hailed a passing cab.

SHE'LL TRY TO MAKE A MAN OF HIM.

A Young Woman Secures Her Lover's Discharge from the Island.

A tall-faced, tearful young woman asked Justice Hogan in Jefferson Market Court yesterday to discharge Charles Fitzsimmons, who had been sent to the Island for six months last Friday for disorderly conduct. He had been arrested on his brother's complaint, and the story told to the Justice by this brother warranted the sentence.

The weeping lady told the young woman, who said her name was Mary Hogan, of the offense that Fitzsimmons had been charged with.

"I know," said the girl, "but we are engaged to be married, and—"

"What! Are you going to marry a man of that kind?" asked the Justice.

"Oh, he's not so bad as he's painted, and I can make him a good citizen, Your Honor," replied the girl, sniffing through her tears.

The Justice made no reply and the girl continued:

"You see, Your Honor, his people didn't like the match. They wanted him to marry some one else, but he loved me and refused to go their bidding. Now I suppose they put him away so that our marriage can't take place."

Justice Hogan reflected awhile and then said: "Well, I'll give you a discharge. Now try and make a man of him."

A burglar woman seldom walked out of a police court.
