TO PROTECT HIMSELF.

Dr. Parkhurst Will Not Ask Sup't. Byrnes for a Police Guard.

His Own Agents, He Says, Will Look Out for Him.

Many Threatening Letters Received in His Mail.

Neither attacks upon his agents by a mob, nor the receipt of letters threatening to kill him, seems to have any deterrent effect upon Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst. He was busy with a mass of correspondence when an "Evening World" reporter called upon him at his home, 123 East Thirty-fifth street, this morning. The bodyguard which is said to follow him wherever he goes was invisible, nor was there anything in his appearance to indicate that he was the least bit worried over recent events.

The publication of the story that he had received a threatening letter was subject for discussion throughout the city generally. More friends than he ever thought existed called on him and many inquiries were received from prominent ministers offering sympathy and co-operation. Whether the Doctor thinks the letter to be the production of a crank who really seeks his life, or whether it is the work of an alleged practical joker, he declines to say. He admits, however, that he considers it in a serious light, and has taken steps for his own protection. The contents of the letter he positively refuses to make public.

"What is the use of doing so?" he said to the reporter this morning. "It will do no good, but, on the contrary, may defeat the very ends we have in view. I would like to let 'The Evening World' have it, but I have promised not to divulge its contents or allow it to be seen. We are working upon it in our own way, and the time is not far distant, I think, when I may give it out, as well as some other interesting matters. It is enough that I have received a letter and that it threatens my life.

"Do I fear an assault upon myself as a result? Well, I don't care to discuss that point now; nor will I say whether I have received any other letters of a similar nature. The time is not yet ripe for entering into such a discussion, I may mention, however, that some of our cases against disorderly houses come up this morning in the Court of Special Sessions."

"Do you intend going down there, and, if so, what provision have you made for safety in the event of an attack being made upon you?" asked the reporter.

"That I cannot answer yet. I am not afraid of going down there, but at the present time I do not think I will go down. It is possible, however, that events may so shape themselves that I may change my mind."

"Have you applied to Supt. Byrnes for police protection, or will you apply?"

"No, I have not, nor do I see any reason why I should. If a whole precinct is unable to afford protection for our agents, and prevent a mob from assaulting them, what can I expect? I am satisfied with the safeguards I have taken myself. They do nothing more than I care to say now. I don't want to get credit for talking too much."

When asked if he had any private detectives employed to follow him about, Dr. Parkhurst said he, nor did he have a regular bodyguard, as had been said. He did not, however, propose to leave the house alone, but would have his agents or personal friends with him.

Supt. Byrnes was not anxious to discuss the Parkhurst matter this morning, for the reason that the investigation into the assault case, inaugurated by him on Saturday, has not yet been completed. So far as the threatening letter incident is concerned, the Superintendent will not say what he thinks of it. He says he stands ready to give Dr. Parkhurst all the protection he needs, but as he is an officer himself, the fact that Dr. Parkhurst had received a threatening letter has not been officially made known to him. His only knowledge of the subject was derived from a perusal of the morning papers.

Mrs. Dr. Parkhurst is her husband's secretary. She goes through a large amount of mail matter every day, sending hundreds of begging letters to the Charity Organization Society for investigation, destroying many more, replying to scores that call for replies and referring others to the Doctor for personal consideration.

Referring to the threatening letter received yesterday, Mrs. Parkhurst said: "They are countless. Ever since his crusade against vice the Doctor has been in receipt of an incredible number. I have handled so many that I recognize at once by the address and destroy them without opening the envelope. They come by mail and messenger. They are handed to the servant, and left at the door surreptitiously. They are written in red and black ink, in prose and rhyme, on all styles of paper, and by people of varying degrees of intelligence. Some are anonymous and others have fictitious names and addresses. Only a few are penned by people of education, and their diction generally indicates unsoundness of mind.

"I might find them insulting if I read them, but I don't. They are, however, annoying. The lamentable feature is the waste of time and money, collectively represented.

"However odious, these letters are discounted by the bundles of encouraging and friendly messages written by people of sterling character, in all walks of life, and of every denomination, and sent from every section of the English-speaking world. It would be a physical impossibility for me to acknowledge these letters, but I like to think that the people who send them know that they are helpful and thoroughly appreciated. One who has the consciousness of doing right for righteousness can withstand vituperation, but when he has the assurance of the support of honorable men and women the opinions of the dishonorable are indifferent to him."

Although Mrs. Parkhurst is in thorough sympathy with her husband, and indorses his active methods employed in his self-assigned task, it is doubtful if she is ever entirely free from anxiety for his safety. Her rest is broken at night and her days are filled with apprehension.

No visitor is permitted to see the Doctor until his or her identity is known or the nature of the business for which the call is made is explained. His office door is from 3 to 4 o'clock. The maid who answers the door is obliging, and a great many callers are received by proxy. Mrs. Parkhurst stands between her husband and the great number of parish workers who seek advice and information on topics relative to church work.

"I can't help being anxious," she says. "When Dr. Parkhurst is away, particularly at night, he is not busy to allow himself unless there is occasion, and, although he is absolutely fearless, I can't overcome my feelings. I am solicitous while he is away, and concerned whether he is exposed to the element that the Society is trying to suppress."

JUSTICE HOGAN NOT AFRAID.

He Will Ask Mrs. Seizer's Relatives to Take Care of Her.

Police Justice Hogan is not alarmed about the demonstration of Mrs. Meiser of Newark, who has been asking him for $5,000 on every occasion that she could approach him. He said this morning:

"I am not in the least alarmed. She is only one of many that make similar or nearly similar requests on all the justices in the city. This woman has been making these demands for several years. I regard her as entirely harmless.

"I shall not commit her for an examination as she desires. She has relatives, and I shall let them take care of her."

WAS REV. MR. MYERS SHOT AT?

Brooklyn Police Inclined to Doubt that He Was.

Doubts were expressed to the Brooklyn police this morning as to whether or not a murderous attack was made on the life of Rev. Cortlandt Myers of the First Baptist church, on account of his fight against the Democratic ring that is in control of the city.

Mr. Myers lives at 120 St. Marks avenue. With his wife he left home soon after 7 o'clock last evening to preach to his congregation in the Academy of Music, where services have been held since the old church was sold.

The pair boarded a car near St. Marks avenue. They had gone only a few blocks when a crash was heard, and there was a shower of glass over Mr. Myers's head. The occupants of the car were frightened, and one woman fainted. Several persons on the car said fire, and sent the report of a pistol.

At the same time another car was going in an opposite direction. This car was also struck by a missile. Detective Sergeant Graham, who was on the car, got off and looked around. He declares that he saw nobody in the vicinity with a pistol, and he made an arrest.

Mr. Myers continued on downtown and preached his evening sermon. He referred to the incident, and said he did not know whether a pistol shot had been fired at a stone thrown at him.

However, he declared that it will take more than stones or bullets to prevent me from preaching the gospel to purify society or to make right my fight against sin."

The police discredit the story. Capt. Farly made the following brief report of the matter to Police Supt. Campbell this morning:

CAR WINDOW BROKEN.

About 7:40 P. M. as car 1,101 of the Flatbush section line of the Brooklyn City Railroad Company, going east, was between Lafayette avenue and Hanson place, a small ball of pebbles was thrown against the window, breaking it, but not injuring any of the passengers. Conductor Serat Henry Graham was on the car and immediately got off, but was unable to learn who broke the window. Mr. Myers, a resident of Brooklyn, was passing at the time, and a few men ran from the direction of the window and were seen running away when the window was broken.

It will be noticed that Capt. Farly does not mention the fact that an arrest was made on a car going west therefrom at the same time.

SUPT. BYRNES ON CRANKS.

He Thinks that They Should Be More Stringently Dealt With.

In speaking this morning of the assassination of Mayor Harrison in Chicago Saturday night, Supt. Byrnes said:

"The murder of Mayor Harrison, of Chicago, is a deplorable matter. It teaches a lesson, however, that cranks and insane persons should be more stringently dealt with. There is no question that in many cases the law is lax. Take for example the case of Madman James M. Donohoe, who was arrested a few years ago for assaulting Miss Mary Anderson. The witness, whom he insatiably adored, daughters followed Miss Anderson all over, and was finally arrested while trying to get into Palmer's Theatre to see her. When searched he had a pistol a foot long in his pocket.

"Donohoe was sent to Flatbush Insane Asylum, where after a while he was allowed considerable freedom. He shortly afterwards escaped and shot Patrick Scott, a prominent citizen of Long Island, in 1891. Mr. Alexander was formerly a Miss Hannah Crocker, and lived in San Francisco. Although was a relative of James Crocker, the millionaire, Miss Crocker Flynn, the wealthy widow of James and Miss Jane Crocker, was married to Charles H. Alexander, the latter's cousin.

"Donohoe followed her to this city, pretending to declare his love for her through the mails, and addressed her in such an manner that he was finally arrested and sent to Bellevue. Donohoe knew nothing whatever about Hannah Crocker, and he was let go. Two weeks after he had been released he came to my office and showed me a letter which I have in my safe, which, if he ever carries out the threats made in it, will be the death of one of the most estimable women in America.

"Donohoe is now in Matteawan Asylum. He is a maniac, and yet he is allowed to go out on parole. Cases like these should be more stringently dealt with. Cranks should be locked up and not allowed to roam around free. I had some trouble with a man immediately after the shot was fired at the Mayor of Chicago. He was a Frenchman, and I believe that something of the sort happened to stimulate them."

Supt. Byrnes has probably had more dealings with cranks than any one else. Not on his office, but in the private of his home, too. Only a short time ago a man hung around Police Headquarters all day making inquiries as to Mr. Byrnes's movements. The Superintendent's attention was called to the fellow, and he had him brought before him. When questioned what he wanted, he said that he wanted Mr. Byrnes to cut his head off and reorganize his brain.

"Don't have your head cut off before?" asked the Superintendent.

"Yes," was the reply, "but I know you won't hurt me."

"All right," said the Superintendent; "take him back into his execution room."

The man went willingly to the detective office. He was placed under arrest, taken to court and committed for examination. His name was Fitzsimmons. He was a brass-worker and lived in Newark.

On another occasion a crank wrote on the steps of Police Headquarters that he was waiting to see Mr. Byrnes. He was also arrested.

CRAZY MAN FOUND.

He Claims He Was Driven Insane by His Wife.

Fred Peterson, a middle-aged man, who says he is a barber but refuses to give his address, was a prisoner in the Tombs Police Court this morning charged with disorderly conduct. He was clad in an overcoat, trousers and shoes only, having ripped his clothing from his person in the cell after being locked up.

Peterson, who admits having been in an asylum, was sitting down this street yesterday morning screaming at the top of his voice, followed by 200 people. He was caught and taken to the station by Officer Keogh.

He says his wife drove him insane. Friends came to the court and said they would care for him, and the Justice let him off with a fine of $2.

DECIDES AGAINST KEMPNER.

Police Commissioners Need Not Put His Name on Ballots.

Justice Barrett Defines What Entitles a Candidate to Recognition.

Justice Barrett, of the Supreme Court, has refused, without costs, to grant Otto Kempner, who wants to be elected to the Assembly as an Independent Democrat from the Seventh District, and Herman D. Kliaker, writs of mandamus compelling the Board of Police Commissioners to accept certificates of nominations and print official ballots.

The Judge says in his opinion: "The point here involved seems at first to be a small one. But when the effect of a ruling one way or the other is considered, it becomes apparent that the question is quite important. It is important, for instance, that citizens should be facilitated in the exercise of their rights to present independent candidates, and that they should not be obstructed by too narrow or technical an interpretation of the statute.

"Upon the other hand, it is equally important that the expenditure of public money should be kept within their legal bounds, and that taxpayers should not be burdened with the expense of printing ballots for candidates who are without substance or genuine support. Checks are placed upon mere frivolous candidacies by the provisions of the statute with regard to the number of voters who are required to set the machinery of independent nominations in motion. The requirements of the statute on this head should be strictly complied with, else the checks upon idle or unsubstantial candidates at once break down. The language of the statute as bearing upon the present question, is that the nomination shall be made by a certificate signed and acknowledged by such voters, each of whom shall add to his signature his place of residence, and make oath that he is such voter and has truly stated such residence.

"The sole safeguard is here plainly the oath. It would be easy enough to prove signatures to a certificate without an oath, and thus to evade the statute. The difficulty would be in inducing a large number of people to commit perjury. Clearly, therefore, the oath should be rigidly demanded both in form and substance. For there should be no possible question as to its adequacy to punish the nominator in case his statements as to residence and voting rights are untrue.

"The oath here exacted is not such as is required to affect registration or upon a challenge when the vote is offered. There the oath is like that administered to a witness in open court. The officers who execute the law are present and the rights flowing from the oath immediately follow. Such an oath is not, and in the nature of things cannot be, in writing; nor need the affiant's statement be formally recorded. It is entirely different, however, where the oath is taken for the very purpose of making a record, and especially where it is taken before an officer who has no relation directly or indirectly to the election machinery.

"In the latter case the oath to have any value towards effectuating the statutory safeguard must necessarily be in writing and be signed by the nominator."

Henry Seidner, counsel for Mr. Kliaker, said to-day that he would ask Gov. Flower to convene a special term of the Supreme Court, General Term, in order might appeal the motion of his client.

NEARLY LOST IN THE MUD.

Anderson Wades Into Harlem River Mire and Goes to Sleep.

He May Have Pneumonia as a Result of His Drunken Experience.

Charles Anderson, twenty-three years old, a fireman, living at 209 West Forty-ninth street, has had an experience that is likely to make him a temperance advocate for the remainder of his days. At present he is in the Harlem Hospital suffering from shock, while the physicians who are in attendance fear that pneumonia may set in and death result. Now that Anderson is thoroughly sober, the thoughts of his narrow escape from a fearful death while intoxicated last night is likely to bring on a long spell of illness.

Anderson is a Swede and unmarried. He started out yesterday to enjoy himself, and imbibed freely. He travelled all over the city, but even now cannot tell how he got in the vicinity of One Hundred and Forty-fifth street and the Harlem River. When the tide runs out the mud forming the bed of the river at that point is over water for a considerable distance. Neither is there any thing to prevent a man from walking out. That is just what Anderson did, and going out several yards or so, he coolly lay down to sleep.

How long he lay on the muddy bottom he cannot tell, but it was some time after midnight when Policeman Polley, of the East One Hundred and Twenty-fifth street station, who was on duty in the vicinity, heard the man groaning. By the aid of a lantern he saw the man's body. He called out to know the cause of the trouble, and was answered by groans and half-maudlin, drunken responses.

The policeman was in a quandry what to do. At first he tried to walk out to the man, but the very first step taken he sank almost up to his knees in mud. Discovering he could do nothing in that manner, he hastily crawled back. Looking towards the man again he found that the tide was rising, and that in a few hours more the water would be upon him, when death from drowning would be sure to result.

All around that section are a number of "kitchen" gardens, provided with wooden fences, separating one from the other. Quickly tearing some of them down, he laid the timber across the mud, making a walk, and managed by this means to reach the man. A little longer and it would have been too late.

Having dragged the man safely ashore, he promptly rang up an ambulance and the man was taken to the hospital. There he was revived with stimulants enough to have him retain consciousness.
