HOW QUEEN LIL FELL.

Mr. Blount's Report of the Great Conspiracy in Hawaii.

Marines Landed Before Even the Conspirators Were Ready.

President Damon, of the Advisory Council, a Reluctant Witness.

What purported to be an abstract of the Hawaiian report of Commissioner Blount was published in this city this morning. It was made up of a series of written statements and reports of verbal statements gathered by Mr. Blount at Honolulu. The effect of the document is to confirm the view of the situation taken in Secretary Gresham's published note to the President, that the so-called revolution in Hawaii, by which the Queen was unseated and the Provisional Government established, was accomplished through the aid of American marines from the cruiser Boston, under orders from Minister Stevens.

The first important statement is signed by Mr. F. Wundenburg, of whom, as showing his standing in Hawaii, it is given out that the Provisional Government offered to him the Collectorship of Customs, which he declined.

The gist of Mr. Wundenburg's declaration lies in the following statements:

The Committee of Safety met at the office of W. O. Smith, in Fort street, at about 4 o'clock in the afternoon of Monday, Jan. 16, 1893, for the purpose of considering the steps necessary to be taken in the formation of a new government.

Shortly after the Committee met they decided they were not ready for the landing of the Advisory Council, and a committee of three with Thurston as the chairman, was at once despatched to the American legation to present to Minister Stevens to delay the landing of the Boston's men. The Committee returned shortly, and said Mr. Stevens had said to them, "Gentlemen, the troops of the Boston landed on a call from this gathering. Whether you are ready or not."

The Committee met at Mr. Waterhouse's residence that evening at 7 o'clock. The question of some sort of government was fully discussed, and it was decided to appoint a committee to wait on the Queen to request her to appoint a government which should be satisfactory to the foreigners supporting the proposed new government. Mr. Peter Kinney, who declined, but acting as a member of the Committee, he acting as chairman, Mr. Paty was appointed by members of the Committee that the American Minister would support the move with the troops of the Boston.

Mr. Paty with Judge Castle and Mr. Cooke then went to the palace and informed the Queen of the decision of the Committee, and requested her to appoint a satisfactory Ministry. The Queen said she would do so, but that she was very tired, and would do it next morning. The Committee then left the palace, and Mr. Castle, Mr. Cooke and myself remained behind and urged the Queen not to do any thing rash, but to wait and see what we could do with the Committee. The Queen said she would not do any thing until next morning. We then left the palace, and I went to my residence, and the Committee to Mr. Castle's office.

At about this time the Queen's Ministry, consisting of Messrs. Parker, Cornwell, Peterson, Wilcox and Colburn, had assembled at the residence of Mr. Parker, and had decided to proclaim the Queen's new constitution. This was done about 5 o'clock, and was followed by the proclamation of martial law by the Queen's Marshal, Wilson, who had been ordered to do so by the Ministry. The Marshal had read the proclamation from the balcony of the palace, and had then proceeded to the station house, where he had read it to the police, and had then proceeded to the barracks of the household troops, where he had read it to the troops. The troops had then marched into town, and had taken possession of the station house, the barracks, and other public buildings. The troops had then marched back to their barracks, and had stacked their arms in the yard, and had then dispersed to their homes.

At about 7 o'clock the Committee of Safety had heard that the troops had turned out against them, and had dispersed to their homes. The Committee had then dispersed to their homes, and I had gone home, and had retired for the night, when at about 8 o'clock I was awakened by a messenger from Castle and Cooke, who said that the Queen had proclaimed a new constitution, and that the Committee of Safety had decided that it was time for us to do something for our protection, and that we had better come down to Castle and Cooke's office. I then dressed and went down to the office, where I found Castle, Cooke, Cornwell, Wundenburg, Ballard, Wilder, Thurston, Damon, Cooke, Jr., and others. We then decided that we had better go to the residence of Mr. Cornwell, and there we found Mr. Cornwell, Mr. Parker, Mr. Peterson, Mr. Colburn, Mr. Wilcox, Mr. Ballard, Mr. Wilder, Mr. Thurston, Mr. Damon, Mr. Cooke, Jr., and others. We then decided that we had better go to the residence of Mr. Damon, and there we found Mr. Damon, Mr. Castle, Mr. Cooke,
