A GREAT COUNTRY.—A writer in the N. O. Picayune, exhibits a bigotod admiration of his own greatness, by catalouging some of the big doings of nature within the boundaries of the United States, thus:—In the Boundaries of the Union:

The largest cataract in the world is Niagara Falls, where, in a stream three-quarters of a mile wide, the waters of the great lakes plunge a hundred and sixty feet.

The largest cave—the Mammoth Cave, Kentucky, where you can make a voyage on a subterranean river, and catch fish without eyes—the largest river, the entire Mississippi—4,100 miles in length.

The largest valley—that of the Mississippi—containing half a million of square miles, and one of the most fertile regions of the globe.

The largest lake—Lake Superior—423 miles long.

The largest natural bridge—that of Cedar Creek in Virginia, of 80 feet span, and over a gap 250 feet deep.

The largest mass of iron—the Pilot Knob Iron Mountain, in Missouri, 350 feet high and two miles around.

The longest railroad—the Illinois Central—731 miles in length, and costing $15,000,000.

The greatest number of miles of railroad in proportion to surface, is in Massachusetts where one mile of more than a mile of road to every square mile of surface.

The longest aqueduct—the Croton of New York 40 1-2 miles long.

The Dying Wife.

Lay the gem upon my bosom,
For it was her sweet warm breath;
And those curls over me passing,
Shall be her last parting wreath.
Scatter flowers over my pathway,
Let me hear your voices ring;
Wander o'er my cheek the sunbeam,
Feel her rosy dimpled fingers.
Kneel beside where I shall slumber,
Hear the sweet strains appear;
Let no tides wave by her forever,
Let no tides wave by her tears.
Wrestle with the grief, my husband,
Bury from midnight until day;
When it vanished so swiftly,
Lay the gem upon my bosom.
See not to long can be there;
See not to my heart she nestles,
It is after years have to wear.
Place another in my chamber,
Let her face be sweeter music,
And her form than mine more fair;
Let her call me the "Father,"
Love the dear babe of that child.
Turn not from the mother's
Tender remembrance of her mother—
Bowing low with veiled eyes.
And the right-hand angel speaks,
Heaven forgiveness, she gently blame:
Lead her sometimes where I am sleeping;
I will answer if she calls.
When breath will stir her ringlets,
Bring her to my cold pillows,
Her soft, black eyes will bright.
And wonder whence it came.
She sent, when years pass over her,
If it will allow her another name.
Walks that every moment
Can remade the lilies here;
If before the midnight dreams
Memory of ceased,
And the right-hand angel speaks,
Bowing low with veiled eyes.
