DESIRABLE COUNTRY RESIDENCE FOR SALE.

I WISH to dispose of my Farm on Mill Creek, 4½ miles from Nashville, about 50 rods from the Murfreesboro' Turnpike, adjoining the lands of Birdsong, Caldwell, Minerva and Franklin Colleges, containing about 60 acres about 10 acres in wood, and the balance under cultivation—with as good orchards as there are in the State, consisting of peaches, apples, pears, grapes, plumbs, in a great variety; two never failing springs, and several chalybeate springs. The improvements are very fair—consisting of a good frame house, with porch 40 feet front, one good brick house, smoke house, kitchen, stables, cribs, &c. The orchard, by close attention, would yield from $300 to $500 yearly, as the fruit is of the choicest kind. My only reason for wishing to dispose of it is my intention to change my location and business. I will dispose of my stock and furniture to any person wishing to purchase the said farm. Terms accommodating. Title indisputable. For further particulars enquire of L. MOSES,

Manney's Reaper and Mower.

I REFER the Farmers to the statements below, made by Dr. John Shelby and L. F. Bradley. I have seen it in operation several times, I am satisfied of its great utility. As the season is advancing, I now offer those I have on hand for $200. L. P. CHEATHAM.

June29, 1853. Nashville, Tenn.

NASHVILLE, June 28, 1853.

COL. L. P. CHEATHAM:—Dear Sir—I have been using the "Reaping and Mowing Machine" patentented by Manney of Illinois, which you are now offering to the citizens of Tennessee. It is a first rate LABOR SAVING MACHINE. It works NEATLY AND RAPIDLY. The amount cut per day will depend principally upon the speed of the team. If the team can travel four miles per hour, it will Reap or Mow, fifteen acres in ten hours. It is entitled to the confidence of the public.

Respectfully J. SHELBY.

I, L. F. Bradley, now managing the farm of Dr. Shelby, make the following statement: We have had for more than one week, one of Col. Cheatham's mowing and reaping machines, we have tried it in clover and grain blown and tangled, and I now state that it mows and cuts cleaner than the scythe blade, and (till it will mow per day as much as 14 hands, and it can reap at least twenty-four acres per day.

The Two-Penny Marriage.

"Mr. Pease, we want to be married."

"Want to be married—what for?"

"Why you see, we don't think it is right for us to be living together this way any longer, and we have been talking over the matter to-day and you see—"

"Yes, yes, I see, you have been talking over the matter over the bottle, and have come to the conclusion to get married. When you get sober you will both repent of it, probably."

"No, sir, we are not very drunk now, not so drunk but what we can think, and we don't think we are doing right—we are not doing as we were brought up to do by pious parents.—We have been reading about the good things you have done for just such poor outcasts as we are; and we want you to try and do something for us."

"Read! Can you read? Do you read the Bible?"

"Well not much lately, but we read the newspapers, and sometimes we read something good in them. How can we read the Bible when we are drunk?"

"Do you think getting married will keep you from getting drunk?"

"Yes, for we are going to take the pledge too—and we shall keep it, depend upon that."

"Suppose you take the pledge and try that first, and if you can keep it till you can wash some of the dirt away, and get some clothes on, then I will marry you."

"No; that won't do. I shall get to thinking what a poor, dirty, miserable wretch I am, and how I am living with this woman, who is not a bad woman by nature, and then I will drink, and then she will drink—oh, cursed rum!—and what is to prevent us? But if we were married, my wife, yys, Mr. Pease, my wife would say, 'Thomas'—she would not say 'Tom'—'you dirty brute, don't be tempted;' and who knows but we might be somebody yet—somebody that our mothers would not be ashamed of."

Here the woman, who had been silent and rather moody, burst into a violent flood of tears, crying, "Mother, mother, I know not whether she is alive or not, and share not inquire; but if we were married and reformed, I would make her happy once more."

"I could no longer stand the appeal," said Mr. P., and determined to give them a trial.—I have married a good many poor, wretched looking couples, but none that looked quite so much so as this. This man was hatless and shoeless, without coat or vest, with long hair and beard grimmed with dirt. He was by trade a brick-layer, one of the best in the city. She wore the last remains of a silk bonnet, and something that might pass for shoes, and an old, very old dress, once a rich merino, apparently without any under garments."

"And your name is Thomas—Thomas what?"

"Elting, sir? Thomas Elting, a good true name and true man—that is, it shall be, if you marry us."

"Well, well. I am going to marry you."

"Are you? There, Mag, I told you so."

"Don't call me Mag. If I am going to be married, I will be by my right name, the one my mother gave me."

"Not Mag. Well, I never knew that."

"Now, Thomas, hold your tongue, you talk too much."

"What is your name?"

"Matilda. Must I tell the other? Yes I will, and will never disgrace it. I don't think I should have been as bad if I had kept it.—That bad woman who first tempted me, made me take a false name. It is a bad thing for a girl to give up her name, unless for that of a good husband. Matilda Fraley. Nobody knows me by that name in this bad city."

"Very well, Matilda and Thomas, take each other by the right hand, and look at me, for I am going to unite you in the holy bond of marriage by God's ordinance. Do you think you are sufficiently sober to comprehend its solemnity?"

"Yes, sir."

"Marriage being one of God's holy ordinances, cannot be kept in sin, misery, filth and drunkenness. Thomas, will you take Matilda to be your lawful, true, and only wedded wife?"

"Yes, sir."

"You promise that you will live with her, in sickness as well as health, and nourish, protect and comfort her as your true and faithful wife; that you will be to her a true and faithful husband; that you will not get drunk, and will clothe yourself and keep clean."

"So I will."

"And you, Matilda, on your part, will you promise the same, and be a true wife to this man?"

"I will try, sir."

"But do you promise all this faithfully?"

"Yes sir. I will."

"Then I pronounce you man and wife."

"Now, Thomas," says the new wife, after I had made out the certificate and given it to her, with an injunction to keep it safely—"now pay Mr. Pease, and let us go home and break the bottle." Thomas felt first in the right hand pocket, then the left, then back to the right, then he examined the watch fob.

"Why, where is it, says she, "you had two dollars this morning!"

"Yes, I know it, but I have only got two cents this evening. There, Mr. Pease, take them; it is all I have got in the world; what more can I give?"

Sure enough, what could he do more? I took them and prayed over them, that in parting with the last penny, this couple might have parted with a vice, a wicked foolish practice, which had reduced them to such a degree of poverty and wretchedness, that the monster power of rum could hardly send its victims lower.

So Tom and Mag were transformed into Mr. and Mrs. Elting, and having grown somewhat more sober while in the house, seemed to fully understand their new position, and all the obligations they had taken upon themselves.

For a few days I thought occasionally of this two-penny marriage, and then it became absorbed with a thousand other scenes of wretchedness which I have witnessed since I have lived in this centre of city misery.

Time wore on and I married many other couples—often those who came in their carriage and left a golden marriage fee—a delicate way of giving to the needy—but among all I had never performed the rite for a couple quite so low as this two-penny fee, and I resolved I never would again. At length, however, I had a call for a full match to them, which I refused.

"Why do you come to me to be married, my friend?" said I to the man. "You are both too poor to live seperate, and besides, you are both terrible drunkards, I know you are."

"That is just what we want to get married for and take the pledge."

"Take that first."

"No we must take all together, nothing else will save us."

"Will that?"

"It did one of my friends."

"Well, then go and bring that friend here: let me see and hear how much it saved him, and then I will make up my mind what to do; if I can do you any good, I want to do it."

"My friend is at work—he has got a good job and several hands working for him, and is making money, and won't quit till night. Shall I come this evening?"

"Yes, I will stay at home and wait for you."

I little expected to see him again, but about 8 o'clock, the servant said that that man and his girl with a gentleman and lady, were waiting in the reception room. I told him to ask the lady and gentleman to walk up to the parlor and sit a moment, while I sent the candidates for marriage away, being determined never to unite another drunken couple, not dreaming there was any sympathy between the parties. But they would not come up, they wanted to see that couple married. So I went down and found the squalidly wretched pair, in company with a well dressed laboring man, for he wore a fine black coat, silk vest, gold watch chain, clean white shirt and cravat, polished calf-skin boots; and his wife was just as neat and tidily dressed as any body's wife, and her face beamed with intelligence, and the way in which she clung to the arm of her husband, as she seemed to shrink from my sight, told that she was a loving as well as pretty wife.

"This couple," says the gentleman, "have come to be married."

"Yes, I know it, but I have refused. Look at them; do they look like fit subjects for such a holy ordinance? God never intended those whom he created in his own image, should live in matrimony like this man and woman. I cannot marry them."

"Cannot! Why not? You married us when we were worse off—more dirty—worse clothed, and more intoxicated."

The woman shrunk back a little more out of sight. I saw she trembled violently, and put her clean cambric handkerchief up to her eyes.

What could it mean? Married them when worse off? Who were they?

"Have you forgotten us?" said the woman, taking my hands in hers, and dropping on her knees: "have you forgotten drunken Tom and Mag? We have never forgotten you, but pray for you every day."

"If you have forgotten them, you have not forgotten the two-penny marriage. No wonder you did not know us. I told Matilda she need not be afraid or ashamed if you did know her. But I knew you would not. How could you? We were in rags and dirt then. Look at us now. All your work, sir. All the blessing of that pledge and that marriage, and that good advice you gave us. Look at this suit of clothes, and her dress—all Matilda's work, every stitch of it. Come and look at our house, as neat as she is. Every thing in it to make a comfortable home; and oh, sir, there is a child in our bed-room. Five hundred dollars already in bank, and I shall add as much more next week, when I finish my job. So much for one year of a sober life, and a faithful, honest, good wife. Now, this man is as good a workman as I am, only he is bound down with the galling fetters of drunkenness, and living with this woman just as I did. Now, he thinks that he can reform just as well as me; but he thinks, he must take the pledge of the same man, and have his first effort sanctified with the same blessing, and then, with a good resolution, and Matilda and me to watch over them, I do believe they will succeed."

So they did. So may others by the same means. I married them, and as I shook hands with Mr. Elting at parting, he left two coins in my hand, with the simple remark, that there was another two-penny marriage fee. I was in hopes that it might have been a couple of dollars this time; I said nothing, and we parted with a mutual God bless you. When I went up stairs I tossed the coins into my wife's lap with the remark, "two pennies again, my dear."

"Two pennies?" Why, husband, they are eagles—real golden eagles. What a deal of good they will do.—What blessings have followed that act."

"And will follow the present, if the pledge is faithfully kept. Truly, this is a good result of a Two-Penny Marriage."

The Mother's of the Bible.

ELIZABETH.

Within our hearing, as we commence to write the results of our month's study, are the tones of a fond mother's voice, conversing, at the close of the day, with her two young sons, of serious and weighty matters. They have retired for the night, and she, choosing the hour when good impressions are easiest made, sits with a hand on each, reminding them of their faults, commending their good behavior, and exerting the influence which tender affection gives to lead them in paths of virtue and uprightness. The blessing of the Eternal be upon her in her holy work.

What wonderful power has God committed to a mother's hands! How exalted are her privileges! who can for a moment set a true estimate upon the worth of her gentle counsels to her boys, who are soon to enter upon life's temptations and duties?—Who can calculate the results of her daily intercourse with her girls, who are so soon to mould in turn the plastic and immortal mind?

There have been some mothers of earth peculiarly favored and blest. It was a privilege to be the mother of Moses—of Elijah—of Samuel. It is a privilege to bring into the world, and train up into life, the intelligent, and industrious, and useful members of society; but she is the most favored to whose arms is given one of those whom Jehovah uses to advance most rapidly his kingdom among men.—"Let my child be an instrument of good to souls—let him live a life of prayer and communion with God, and be devoted to
