DO YOU BELIEVE "GIANTS" RECEIVE SPECIAL FAVORS?

"Boobs" Claim Race Is Fixed for a Close Finish so That League Magnates Will Make Money.

FACTS DISPROVE ARGUMENT

Fixing a Pennant Race Would Wreck Any League—Players Would Not Be Party to Such a Deal—Lucky Trades May Help Braves in Games.

NEW YORK, September 12.—And now the boobs are assuring each other thusly: "Well, maybe the National League race ain't fixed fer the Giants to win the pennant, but it's fixed for a close finish, so the league magnates will make money."

It seems that those folks who cannot believe baseball is an honest game cannot be suppressed. They are like corks—always bobbing around. And, like corks, they are light throughout their make-up.

Fixing a pennant race, as previously pointed out, would be the height of folly for the men behind. To fix a race the managers or owners of the clubs that were not to win would have to issue orders for their men to "lay down." Probably the men would "lay down"—but the chances are they would refuse. They want a share of the world's series money just as well as the next person.

But, assuming that the men did agree to lay down. Some time in the future one or another of those fellows might get a "raw" deal from his owners. It would make him peevish and vindicative. What would be his first move? Nothing else but to rush to some newspaper office and relate the inner details of the frame-up.

Does any one think that the baseball magnates, whose fortunes are tied up in baseball, and whose success depends upon the honesty of the game, would become involved in a crooked deal that later on certainly would be disclosed by some disgruntled player?

In other years, it may be remembered, the claim was made that the Giants were strengthened in midseason, at the expense of the weaker clubs, so that it would be a cinch for the New Yorkers to win the pennant. The boob element had it all figured out that the National League powers wanted the Giants to win because the Giants could pull a bigger crowd than any other town in the National circuit.

The Giants are able to outdraw any other city in the world's series crowds, but it isn't at all certain that they'll be in the world's series. They need help in the form of real players, but they aren't getting it. They need at once clean fielding, hard-hitting outfielders, to bolster up their outer garden. They need some one to take Stock's place at third. The recruit fields well and is heady, but he is weak with the stick.

And most of all the Giants need a seasoned pitcher—one who can be counted upon to win at least two-thirds of his games. But they haven't gotten him and they won't get him. The other clubs need their good pitchers just as much as the Giants. And they are hanging on to them. The New Yorkers got Marty O'Toole from the Pirates last week, for the waiver price of $1,500, but it's a question whether O'Toole will help them.

The condition seems to effectively spike any yarn that the powers that are in the National League force other clubs to make trades with the Giants that are advantageous to the Giants. If they did they certainly would do so now. But they won't. They never have and never will.

Some folks seem to think the Boston-Brooklyn deal, whereby the Braves got "Red" Smith, the third sacker, was "fixed." More bunk. The funny part of the deal is the fact that the Dodgers were glad to get rid of Smith. They would have let him go to the minors, so the story goes, if the Braves hadn't taken him off their hands.

Smith didn't play any wonderful game for the Dodgers either at bat or in field, and he was accused of being a trouble-maker. Manager Robinson had Getz, whom he wanted to play at third, and whom he considered better than Smith. Just at the time the Dodgers' owners were figuring on what to do with the red-headed sacker, Stallings came along and made an offer for him.

Stallings figured that Smith was just the man he needed to round out his infield. He got Smith—almost at his own terms—and Smith justified the judgment of Stallings. He has played an almost faultless game at third, has hit in timely fashion, and has rounded out the stonewall infield of the Bostonians.

Stallings took a chance on Smith when no one else would. And Stallings also has taken a chance on Moran, the once-time Brooklyn outfielder, whom he bought from the Reds. The Braves outfield up to the time Moran joined the club was not a powerful looking set and many believe that Moran will not be much of an improvement.

But Stallings figured that Moran would help him. He paid a price for him far beyond that which any other manager would have paid. He pitted his estimate of Moran against that of the other managers in the old league as to Moran's value.

Will Moran demonstrate that Stallings's judgment was best? And, if Moran makes good, will the "fixed" element have something to say about the race being fixed for the Braves to win?

GOOBERS AND TRUCKERS DIVIDE FINAL GAMES

Petersburg Wins First Contest by Score of 3 to 2, and Is Given Whitewash in Second.

PETERSBURG, VA., September 12.—Petersburg and Portsmouth closed the Virginia State League season in this city this afternoon by splitting even on the double-header, Petersburg winning the first game by a score of 2 to 1, and Portsmouth shutting them out in the second, 3 to 0.

Considering the weather and the crowd which numbered about 200 of the faithful fans, both games were excellent exhibitions, the fielding and batting of both teams being better than it was when the season was in its prime.

The majority of the Petersburg players left for their homes to-night, carrying with them the best wishes of the fans and the public generally for the sport and pleasure that they have given them this season. The scores:
