Says the West Is the Place for Action.

In the February American Magazine Ray Stannard Baker begins a new series of letters from the field entitled "Seeing America." His first article is a report from the west, through which he has been traveling extensively of late. In connection with the "Safety First" movement among the railroads he writes in part, as follows:

"I live in New England and have to travel much on New England railroads which of late have shown themselves to be the most dangerous to human life, perhaps, of any in the world. We have had great talk there of the necessity of more safety in travel—and have thus far done nothing practical. But in the west, no sooner do they think of a thing than they try to do it! It's their youth and inexperience, I suppose. The east seems to see, first of all, the many excellent reasons why a thing should not be done, but the west sees, first of all, the reasons why it should.

"Two or three years the middle west began a campaign to secure greater safety in travel, which has had an amazing growth. 'Safety First' are the catchwords. I heard of the movement in many places. At Chicago the Association of Commerce is behind it, and the coroner has appointed a public committee to deal with the conditions. All the great railroads are interested. The Northwestern has had the work under way for three years, and already the results are truly notable. Ralph C. Richard, the official in charge of the safety service of that railroad, shows that in the three years ended June 30, 1910, the records show that:

92 fewer employes were killed.
6,423 fewer employes were injured.
659 fewer passengers were injured.
133 fewer outsiders were killed.
157 fewer outsiders were injured.

"The west is actually beginning to think first of human life, then of property. And when you come to think of it, this is the very core and essence of the progressive movement of which we have had such widespread report—a movement wider than any political party."
