A Pre-empted Right.

How many of you boys way back in the '80s knew that I was regarded as one of the homeliest men in Kentucky?" remarked Senator Bradley.

"It's a fact," and with a chuckle he proceeded to give an instance of it.

"Under the laws of Kentucky the governor has the power of pardon even before grand jury proceedings on trial. During my first term as governor my attorney general was John K. Hendrick. Some people were divided as to which of us was homeliest. John always maintained that he was a better looking man than I, and I always disputed his argument.

"One day Hendrick walked into my office.

"'I want a pardon, governor,' he announced.

"'All right, Hendrick,' I replied; 'but what have you done?'

"'I just shot a man down the street,' said Hendrick, calmly.

"'What for?' I demanded.

"'He said I looked like you,' answered Hendrick, 'and I could not stand for that.'

"'You shall have the pardon immediately,' I replied. 'If you hadn't shot the cuss, I would have done so on sight.'"—in National Monthly.
