GOING GERMAN NAVAL TOOLS ONE BETTER

Last Days of War Produced Many Inventions to Nullify Their Worst.

LONDON, March 13.—One of the most successful devices invented by British naval experts in the war time was one known as a "blister" and served to protect ships against torpedoes. It is an outer steel casing fitted to the sides of ships. All of its technical details of construction have not been revealed, but naval experts assert that ships equipped with blisters run no greater risk from undersea attacks than from surface fighting dangers. In the war the Germans torpedoed several blister ships, but in every case, it is asserted, the vessels were able to reach port and be repaired.

Sir E. H. T. D'Eyncourt, director of naval construction, invented the blister, which was first attached to four old cruisers. Patiently the navy waited for a test for two years, then, in June, 1917, the cruiser Grafton, while steaming at 16 knots, was struck amidships by a torpedo fired from a German submarine only 30 yards distant. The blister, which stuck out from the cruiser's side about 15 feet, exploded the torpedo and the Grafton steamed back to port with only a slight list.

Torpedo Menace Met.

Improvements were made on the blisters and they were fitted to the sister monitors Erebus and Terror, both these vessels, mounting 15-inch guns, bombarded the Belgian coast for months. Both were torpedoed within a week and but for the protecting blisters they would have been sunk. Three torpedoes struck the Erebus, two hitting the fore part of the monitor where the blister tapers off. As a precaution the Erebus was beached, but it was afterward found that she was less severely damaged than had been thought and she was subsequently repaired. No ship ever before survived three torpedoes.

The navy now has about 50 blister ships in commission, including some of the first battle cruiser squadron. The new dreadnaughts Rodney, Howe and Hood are being fitted also with blisters.

Other Inventions.

A self-propelling projectile charged with 500 pounds of T. N. T. was perfected by the naval experts only a short time before the armistice was signed. It is believed to have strengthened materially the power and effectiveness of the British fleet. The projectile can be discharged without concussion from small boats or a light platform, exploding on the contact, or when fitted with a special device, below the water, thus serving the purpose of a depth charge.

An apparatus for throwing a flame for a distance of 240 feet, as water is thrown from a hose, was rigged on one of the vessels that took part in the raid on Zeebrugge. But before it could be used a shell from the enemy batteries put it out of action.

Another invention is a gun to fire signals from submerged submarines. It sends a star shell 300 feet into the air.

Turn Night Into Day.

Several kinds of smoke screens were invented, most of them for the purpose of baffling U-boats. A powerful flare equal to a million candle power was another achievement of the naval inventors which was used with great effect against enemy submarines waiting on the surface at night to attack merchant ships. These flares, suddenly ignited, turned night into day, and in the straits of Dover alone 17 U-boats were caught by their aid and sunk.

The work of developing these inventions was carried on by the royal naval experimental station near London. Its staff comprised of 25 officers and 1,050 men, all experts either in research or constructional work, most of them being chemists or engineers.

LOWER PRICES NOT TO BE EXPECTED SOON

COBLENZ, March 13.—It will be many years before prices in the Rhineland will fall to a pre-war level, according to German economists, a view shared by officers of the third army of occupation, who have been detailed to study the situation. Since the armistice was signed there has been a general increase in prices with but few exceptions to show a downward trend.

In certain classes of the population there was a hazy notion that a sudden fall in the prices of all necessaries would take place at the end of the war. It appeared to be based on nothing more than an impression that conditions in the coming peace time would be practically identical with those before the war, and buyers of finished iron products such as machinery, hardware, field and garden implements and steel wire have not placed their orders. A consequence has been a hesitancy on the part of manufacturers to make the effort to reach their old marks of production, incidentally leaving unemployed thousands of discharged soldiers.

Reasons given why lower prices are not to be expected are the increase in the cost of raw mater
