MARX MAY BE HIDDEN HERE.

If the Young Lawyer Has Returned from the South Friends Keep Secret.

MYSTERY IN THE AIR.

No One of the Family Will Tell Where the Whitecaps' Slayer Is.

Herbert Marx, the young Brooklyn lawyer who killed two men and fatally wounded a third in defense of himself at his home at Oak Grove, Va., last Tuesday night, may be hidden by his friends in Brooklyn until he has recovered from his recent exciting experience.

It was stated by a relative this morning that young Marx had not yet arrived at his home, No. 139 Sixth avenue, but was expected hourly. An air of mystery surrounded his home.

Young Marx, who is twenty-four years old, is of small stature, being about five feet six inches in height. He is in poor health, his visit to Virginia having been due to nervous prostration following hard study as a law student.

The experiences through which he has gone during the past three days have unnerved him, and it is claimed he shows plainly in his appearance the strain that followed the night assault on his home, his vigorous defense from men whom he believed to be bent on robbery, and the awful shock when he discovered that he had killed a man whom he had always regarded as his friend.

Mr. Marx's Denial.

Though a Coroner's jury has exonerated Marx for the killing of W. P. Taylor, jr., the man who was shot through the heart, and who was dead when picked up, it is possible that Mr. Marx will have to return to Virginia to attend the inquest on the body of William L. Heffin, who died in the Emergency Hospital, in Washington.

Marx says that he did not return from Virginia because he feared to stay there. He says that the sentiment in Westmoreland County, where he is well known, is entirely favorable to him, and that it is conceded, even by the friends of the dead and wounded men, that he could not have acted differently under the circumstances.

He came back, he says, in order to be with his people and to assure his mother and sisters that he was safe and sound and because he wished to separate himself from the scene of his terrifying ordeal.

Girl Exonerates Marx.

Miss Rose Taylor, the young woman whom Marx was accused of insulting, has made a statement exonerating him. She says that he had always treated her with consideration.

The story that he had been guilty of improper conduct seems to have been started by a negro and was believed by Taylor, who organized the raid on Marx. It is possible that jealousy played an important part in the decision of Taylor and his associates to wreak vengence on Marx.

James Q. Stiff, who is in the Emergency Hospital in Washington, was still alive this afternoon, but the physicians hold out no hopes of his recovery. He is paralyzed from his shoulders down, and his death is expected at any time.

He has a bullet in his neck which rests so close to the spinal column that the surgeons are afraid to probe for it. The spinal cord is injured and nothing can be done to relieve the sufferer.

Stiff has made a brief statement, in which he shows that Miss Taylor knew nothing of the proposed attack on Marx. He has not been told that Heffin is dead and he shows much concern for the condition of his companion.

LEFT BOAT LODGING, NO ONE KNOWS HOW.

STRANGER GUEST LAST APPEARED DISROBED.

May Have Jumped Overboard in Fit of Despondency or Insanity.

The police of Jersey City are searching to-day for Isaac Lamb, who, after securing lodging on a barge lying in the Hudson River, appeared on deck last night clad only in his underwear and suddenly disappeared.

The man was well dressed, and from his manner it is supposed he belonged to a good family. He applied for a sleeping place at 11 o'clock last night to Capt. Charles D. Hester, of the barge Shenango, which is moored at Pier 5 of the Lehigh Valley Railroad. After he had been shown to a bunk and partly disrobed he came on deck, and has not since been seen.

One theory is that the man was despondent and jumped overboard, and another is that he was demented and wandered away.

His Quietus.

(From the Baltimore Sun.)

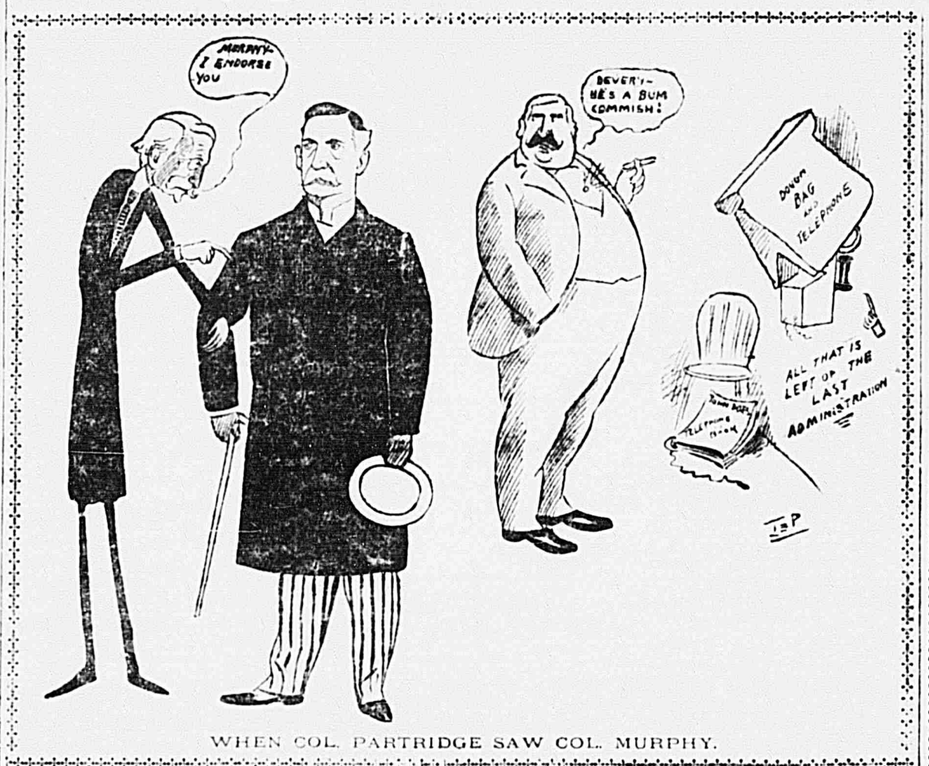
A young man from the country lately volunteered his services to gallant a young lady home from a party.

On his way he cudgelled his brains for some interesting topic of conversation to amuse her with, but in vain. He could hit upon nothing until they met several cows, when the swain said, with much simplicity of manner, "Now, isn't it strange, what a motherly appearance a cow has?"

To this the lady replied, "I do not think it strange, sir, that a cow should have a motherly appearance to a calf."

The beau was silent during the rest of the walk.

PARTRIDGE CALLS TO LEARN ROPES.



WHEN COL. PARTRIDGE SAW COL. MURPHY.

Col. Kip Presents Col. Partridge to Col. Murphy and Col. Kinkead and He Get Some Pointers on His New Job.

It was just like old Kentucky in the office of Commissioner Murphy in Police Headquarters this morning. The room was full of Colonels.

There was Col. Murphy, the Commissioner; Col. Partridge, soon to be Commissioner; Col. Kip, secretary to the Police Board and Lieutenant-Colonel of the Seventh Regiment, and Col. Kinkead, Col. Murphy's private secretary.

Col. Partridge arrived at headquarters at 10 o'clock. Unannounced he entered the ante-room of Commissioner Murphy's office and sat down. He was recognized, however, by the exchange editor of the Police Department, who was clipping police items out of the morning papers. The exchange editor hastened to the inner room. There he found all of the department colonels and Inspector Cortright.

"Col. Partridge has arrived," said the exchange editor.

"Show him in," commanded Col. Murphy.

Col. Partridge was shown in.

Introduced to Col. Murphy.

He shook hands with Col. Kip, with whom he was acquainted. Col. Kip introduced him to Col. Murphy, who introduced him to Col. Kinkead and to Inspector Cortright.

The Commissioner instantly indorsed Col. Partridge by saying that he was glad to see him.

Col. Partridge said that he appreciated Col. Murphy's courtesy in extending an invitation to call.

"I suppose you would like to get some idea of the routine work of the department," suggested Col. Murphy.

"It would please me," replied Col. Partridge.

The new Commissioner was given a seat to the left of Col. Murphy, and Col. Kinkead went on with the work of opening the mail.

The communications were of a perfunctory nature until one was opened from Lawyer Louis J. Grant. Mr. Grant wrote in behalf of a patrolman of the name of Hart who has been dropped from the department and is seeking reinstatement.

"He's the most persistent man I ever saw," said Col. Murphy with a sigh. "I've told him I won't reinstate him unless the Supreme Court orders it, but this man Grant keeps on bombarding me."

Col. Partridge was greatly interested in the case of Patrolman Hart. He asked Commissioner Murphy to explain the law regarding the reinstatement of policemen.

Murphy Doesn't Indorse It.

If there is anybody familiar with that law it is Commissioner Murphy. He doesn't indorse it. He explained that the courts could compel a Commissioner to reverse his own ruling in a police dismissal.

"Well," said Col. Partridge, "I suppose that when a policeman who has been dismissed gets reinstated he thinks he is a bigger man than the Commissioner."

"Good joke," shouted Col. Murphy. "Good joke."

This was his second indorsement.

When the mail had been gone through Commissioner Murphy sent for Capt. Titus, of the Detective Bureau, who was introduced to Col. Partridge. Capt. Titus invited the Colonel to step down and look at the Rogues' Gallery, and the Colonel said he would, later on.

Inspector Cortright went out at this juncture returning soon after with Inspectors Brooks, Harley, Cross, Kane and Grant, all of whom were introduced to Col. Partridge.

Inspector Thompson is on his vacation.

After meeting the Inspectors, Col. Partridge left the building. He said he had other business to attend to.

Col. Partridge told an Evening World reporter that his reception had been most cordial and that he had been greatly interested in what he had seen and heard.

Denial of Monroe Story.

When asked about the rumor that he would appoint Col. Robert Grier Monroe as Deputy Commissioner, Col. Partridge did not immediately reply.

"All I can say about that at present," he said, finally, "is that it is not settled."

When Col. Partridge had gone City Chamberlain Pat Keenan, who is said to be the choice of Richard Croker for the leadership of Tammany Hall, was admitted to Commissioner Murphy's office. Mr. Keenan had been waiting in the anteroom for more than an hour and was visibly annoyed.

Mayor-elect Low decided to-day that Col. Monroe was offered the position of Deputy Commissioner of Police last night.

Col. Monroe also denied that the place had been tendered him, but refused to say that he would refuse it should the offer of the Deputy Commissionership be made.

ALLEGED SWINDLER ATTEMPTS SUICIDE.

PRISONER FOUND CUTTING ARTERIES IN CELL.

Accused of Trying to Pass a Worthless Check in Making Gift to Mission.

Rather than remain in a cell in the West Forty-seventh street police station this morning, Arthur Howard tried to die. When he was searched, as all prisoners are, he concealed a small pocket knife, and the doorman later found him carefully cutting the blood vessels in his left wrist. He was taken to Roosevelt Hospital and will have to answer to two charges now, instead of one.

Howard is fifty-four years old and says he lives at No. 216 West One Hundred and Sixteenth street, and that he is a member of Thomas Post, G. A. R., of Washington, D. C. He was arrested, charged with attempting to pass a worthless check.

JAILED FOR $1,800 CLOTHING THEFT.

MANAGER OF NEW HAVEN STORE IN TOILS.

As the result of a long search for the robbers of $1,800 worth of clothing from a truck in front of his factory in Waverley place, this city, Irving Alsbury has had the manager of a New Haven clothing store arrested and held in $2,500 bail for trial.

The manufacturer, accompanied by a number of detectives, went to the Outlet Clothing Company's store, No. 53 Church street, New Haven, and bought some clothing, which he identified at once as part of the stolen property.

Harry Leon, manager of the store, was arrested. He confessed to having sold $700 worth of the goods. He returned a like amount of the clothing to Alsbury.

CONDUCTOR CAUGHT BETWEEN TWO CARS

RECEIVES BROKEN LEG AND MANY BRUISES.

Persons Who Saw the Man in Crushed Fenders Thought He Was Killed.

A large crowd of persons, including many women, saw a Madison avenue car conductor have a narrow escape from being crushed to death between two cars in front of the bridge entrance to-day.

Joseph Smyth, twenty-nine years old, of No. 645 Eighth avenue, was the man. While he was lowering his fender, preparatory to starting on the up town trip, car No. 1351, which was coming down on the same track, bumped into Conductor Smyth before the motorman noticed him. Smyth was tumbled into the fender of his own car by the collision and was seen by the motorman of car No. 1351 just in time.

Policemen Heartt and Boehm ran to the injured man's aid, and with much difficulty extricated him from the mass of smashed fenders. Besides being painfully bruised about the body, Smyth suffered from a fractured leg and a sprained ankle.

He was removed to the Hudson street Hospital by Dr. Olds, in an ambulance.

HARD TIME GETTING WED.

SPRINGFIELD, O., Dec. 6.—John M. Good, the wealthy ex-Mayor of this city, was married last evening to Miss Jessie Minnick, but not until after five ministers had refused to perform the ceremony.

Three of them told Mr. Good outright they could not marry him owing to the manner in which he had been divorced from his wife.

TO PROTECT EMPLOYEES.

A meeting of the Civil Employees' Association of the State of New York to discuss their standing under the incoming municipal administration was held last night in Borough Hall, Brooklyn. One of the most important subjects was the presentation of a bill to the Legislature for the protection of members of the association.

The bill makes it a misdemeanor for a person in charge of a public office to remove any employee from his position for political or unjustifiable reasons. It will be presented to the next Legislature.
