INSANE PATIENT OUTWITS GUARDS

MADMAN GETS HIS CUSTODIAN INTOXICATED

Crazy Man Shrewd Enough to Persuade Keepers to Lock in Man Who Brought Him to the Asylum

Special Cable to The Herald.

PARIS, Aug. 13.—The Figaro publishes the following story of the accidental removal of a sane man to a madhouse.

A gamekeeper and a baker were, at the mayor's request, escorting to the asylum at Anjers a certain Legrand, a member of the town council of Cholet, who had lost his reason.

On the road Legrand's escort, finding it difficult to persuade him to accompany them, decided, in order to render him more docile, to ply him with liquor.

They took him into a cafe, and the three indulged in such copious libations that not only the madman but his keepers also were soon very much intoxicated.

When they arrived in this condition at the asylum, the director found it impossible to gather from the incoherent speech of the men which one of them was the lunatic.

He thereupon telegraphed to the mayor of Cholet asking which of the three men was mad.

"Legrand," the mayor wired in reply.

The telegraph operator, however, transmitted the words, "le grand" (the tall one.)

The director, in order to be sure of his man, had the trio duly measured, and finding the gamekeeper to be the tallest of the three, he forthwith had him placed in a straightjacket, despite the man's vehement cries that it was not he but the councillor who was the madman, his violence only having the effect of convincing the director that he was dealing with the right man.

The whole ludicrous affair was then brought to light, and the gamekeeper, whose reason during his forcible confinement has now really become unhinged, was provisionally released, but placed under strict medical surveillance, while the lunatic, Legrand, has been declared not sufficiently insane to be placed in the asylum.

President Cabrera of Guatamala, out of his own personal funds, has decided to establish a practical school of science, arts and agriculture under American professors. The tuition will be given in the English language.
