POLISH INDUSTRY BEST IN RUSSIA

ANNUAL OUTPUT OF MANUFACTURES AMOUNT TO ABOUT SIXTY-FIVE MILLIONS

MUSCOVITE RULE HINDERS

Warsaw Once Rivalled Paris and Was Most Brilliant City Outside of Gay Capital of the French

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 26.—The National Geograpuic Society's semi-weekly statement bearing on the war geography of Europe, just prepared, deals with the immediate field in the Eastern theatre and with Monaco, the vest pocket government that lives by its gaming tables.

"The Government of Warsaw, occupying a narrow strip of land in the heart of Russian Poland, where vast military operations have been in progress for weeks, is one of the richest manufacturing districts in the whole Russian Empire. The importation of industries by the Muscovites has taken its way over this flat plain northward and a great many of these industries have built, not far from the borders, nearer to the skilled labor markets and the machinery and raw materials than would be the case deeper in the hinterland. Thus, the textile industry crossed into Russian territory, and for the great part, remained in the Warsaw Government. Iron and steel working followed the textile mills, and the manufacture of boots and shoes, hosiery, sugar, tobacco, furniture, machinery and tire making have grown up around the working of the two most important modern staples, iron and fibres.

"Warsaw, the capital of the Government of Warsaw as it is the capital of the General Government of Russian Poland, is the industrial center. The value of the annual output of manufactures of the government of Russian Poland, is the industrial center. The value of the annual output of manufactures of the government is estimated at between $60,000,000 and $65,000,000, and of this the city of Warsaw produces nearly three-fifths. Cotton and woolen goods and products of iron and steel make up the bulk of this value. Footwear, leather goods and beer sugar are, however, items of considerable importance in the prosperity of the district. The Germans and Jews have played the leading parts in developing the manufacturing ventures. Russian rule, wholesale deportations of artisans after the Polish uprisings of 1831, 1863 and 1863, and a German customs barrier on one side, with a Russian customs barrier on the other have operated to greatly retard the growth of the government's industrial importance.

"There is a well-developed earth culture in the government, despite the fact that its soils are very poor and that in some sections there are periodical drownings out of the country by the Bug and Vistula. The herring grounds are hogey. The government embraces an area of 9,845 miles, and houses a population of about 2,300,000. The land is mostly low and flat, broken only here and there by low hills in the south and by the high-terraced banks on the left of the Vistula in the northwest. The Vistula forms the northern boundary of the government and is its principal artery of trade. On the west, it is bounded by the Prussian frontier. The herd grazing of eastern Prussia is carried on into the Government of Warsaw, and, combined, its herds of horses, cattle, sheep and swine number about 1,500,000 head. In the eighteenth century, when the City of Warsaw, next to Paris was the most brilliant city in Europe, this flat plain was honeycombed with lands and in some tracts, though almost bare of habitations.

Monaco.

"War has struck its hardest blow at the existence of Monaco. Without blockade, without even being made an object of hostility, the industries of this little principality have been entirely cut off. Monaco, the world's smallest state, situated on the Mediterranean, earned its livelihood from gaming and catering to visitors. Gamblers and other seekers after amusement have deserted its famous gaming city. Monte Carlo, and with them have gone all people means for the support of Monaco's citizens.

"Situated above a bay of the Mediterranean, and jutting in its terraces, the villa tops of the Great Sea's waters, with the sullen blue of the azure sky, Monte Carlo is a rarely beautiful place in which to pass a holiday, whether one be interested in the casino with its gaming tables or whether he desires such forms of amusement. The weather is always mild, varied, bracing. It seldom pours on the one hand, or chills on the other, in Monaco. There is enjoyment in the sunshine, in the breezes, in the waters and the charms of surroundings, air and water. Whether in this high place of all places always delightly upon one, so lightly and so delicately as a pleasant dream.

"Famed for its casinos, and much owing for its international character, Monte Carlo has turned widely in yet another capacity. It has been the messengerless grounds for pan-electromalleations and of all factions who have felt the need of an ultra, connections or recognition. Potential statesmen, together with artists, writers, professional men of

Germany Will Figt to Bitter End

That Germany will fight to the limit is the statement of Admiral von Tirpitz, one of the strong men of Germany and the builder of the present German navy.

"It is said England wants war to the kill," said he. "If England insists on that we can accommodate her."

Admiral von Tirpitz said that were Germany to chase to do so she might blockade all the ports of Great Britain with her submarines and sink merchant vessels taking food there. In this way, he insisted, the inhabitants of the Kingdom might be starved. Whether or not Germany will attempt this he did not say. Several merchant vessels might be torpedoed and that would frighten away others, his interviewer believing he meant.

HEAD OF MORMON CHURCH RADICAL

BELIEVES PROPERTY IN EXCESS OF NEEDS SHOULD BELONG TO CHURCH

WORCESTER, Mass., Dec. 26.—The elimination of poverty is the foremost plan of Frederick M. Smith, the new acting head of the Church of Jesus Christ of the Latter Day Saints, the Reorganized Mormon Church. This young leader of 500,000 church members has outlined a campaign of social reform, and is completing his studies at Clark University in order that he may be sufficiently equipped in knowledge of philosophy to put his ideas to practical test.

Young Mr. Smith has been for some time the chief aid of his father, President Joseph Smith, who died recently at Independence, Mo. Through the aid of a secretary he will be able to remain in Worcester and keep in touch with the work of the church by means of a system of reports which he has inaugurated.

The election of Mr. Smith to the presidency next April will mean the beginning of a new era in the reorganized Mormon church. The doctrines of the young leader are considered radical by outsiders.

"It is our belief," said Mr. Smith, "that it is not intended that some should have an overabundance of wealth, hoarding beyond all their needs, while others have nothing. We believe that everything a man possesses beyond a comfortable competence should be turned over to the church treasury for redistribution and readjustment along judicious lines.

"The socialists and the communists have the right idea in a measure, but they lack the religious element. It is often easy to convert the brain without converting the heart. We believe in this doctrine of Christ economy as an article of faith.

"There is a growing sentiment in our church in favor of putting this doctrine into practice. It should be done. There are millionaires in our faith who have told me they are ready to lay their wealth on the altar of the church as soon as the plan is put into practice. There are merchants who have expressed the same inclination to me. I should consider this as a future policy of the church.

"We believe there should not be any poor people. There is no place for the drone in our fold. The man who is at a business that he is not competent to run to advantage and at a profit, should be turned to some other vocation and someone put in his place who can make of his business what it should be.

"The money which will go into the church in this way is not a charitable fund and those who benefit from it are not partaking of charity. Those who need help get it because they are entitled to it by reason of misfortune. The widow with a family of children to look after gets her help from those funds and stands as high as any in the sight of the church. She is not considered as a recipient of charity."

SENATOR JAMES A. REED.

Senators James A. Reed of Missouri, James E. Martine of New Jersey, and James A. O'Gorman of New York have begun a fight on President Wilson because he failed to consider their recommendations of candidates for office in their states. Senators Reed and O'Gorman have been upheld by the Senate, which refused to confirm nominations made by the President. The chief interest of the contest lies centered in the action of the Senate in connecting with the presidential nominations of Farley C. Rhodes for postmaster and in the district receiving at Kansas City, Mo., and George E. Hulston for collector of internal revenue for the southern district of New Jersey.

Senators Reed and O'Gorman have been at odds with the President on several occasions. But Senator Martine was once his chief champion. It was President Wilson's insistence which caused Martine to be elected senator from New Jersey.
