CALL 1900 RICE WILL A FORGERY.

BANK OFFICIALS REJECT THE PATRICK DOCUMENT.

Fight for Millionaire's Fortune Still On—Valet Jones Wanted Bogus Will Drawn.

The contest on the $4,000,000 left by William Marsh Rice, for whose murder Albert T. Patrick was convicted, was resumed to-day before Surrogate Fitzgerald, in the regular Surrogate's Court, with Walter O. Wetherbee, confidential man at Swenson & Sons' bank, on the witness stand.

There was an imposing array of lawyers to defend the 1896 will, which gave the bulk of the Rice millions to the as yet non-existent "Rice Institute of Texas," a half million being left for division among six families of relatives, aggregating about thirty persons.

There was only John C. Tomlinson to champion the will of 1900, alleged by him others to be a forgery, connected by Albert T. Patrick. The 1900 will bequeathed most of the fortune to Patrick, but gave more to each of the thirty relatives than the will of 1896.

Mr. Wetherbee was on the stand for cross-examination. He said he was in charge of the Texas land business of Swenson & Sons, and knew Mr. Rice casually in that business.

"Had you any affection for Rice?" Mr. Tomlinson asked.

"No particular affection."

"You have testified that in your judgment the signatures of William M. Rice on the will of 1900 were forgeries. Are you a handwriting expert?"

"No; no greater than the average man accustomed to judge of the genuineness of writings."

"Why do you think these signatures are forgeries?"

"I have three reasons. First, the signatures do not look like Mr. Rice's signature; second, they look as if they were traced, and third, Mr. Rice didn't write like that."

"Did you ever express doubts of the genuineness before you saw the signature?"

"Yes, several times."

"What led you to think so before you saw the paper?"

"Well, because Valet Jones wanted me to join with him in making a bogus will for Mr. Rice."

John H. Wallace, a paying clerk for Swenson & Sons, testified that the signature to the 1900 will was not that of William M. Rice.

POLICE HERO PUT ON TRIAL.

MILES WAS PROMOTED FOR FIRE RESCUE.

There were thirty-six cases on the police trial calendar for Deputy Commissioner Thurston to try at Headquarters to-day. Two more important trials were put down for special hearing in the afternoon.

Roundsman William A. Miles, of the East Thirty-fifth street station, was charged with having failed to deliver property to a prisoner. Miles was made a roundsman for heroic conduct in a rescue in a big fire in May, 1900.

Miles said that he never received the property in question. He testified that he had given McKibbon, whose right name is James Duffy, $15, "rather than have trouble with him." Upon his promise to bring Duffy forward Deputy Commissioner Thurston reserved decision for a week.

Policeman Roger S. McCoy owed about $23 and had filed a petition in bankruptcy in the United States Court. "McCoy's record," said Thurston, "shows that he has done nothing else since he got on the force but contract debts."

Frederick Faut-Haber, of the Mulberry street station, had a second debt complain, which came up later. He handed in a receipt, which he had got in the hall. "You did that same thing last time," said Thurston. "I fine you one day's pay."

Policeman J. A. Murray, of the Oak street station, was placed on trial at noon charged with having reported sick at 6 P. M. March 24, although absent from his residence. Dr. Lewis Sturgeon Ford at 8.40 P. M. from return roll call from a fire at 6.45 A. M. April 2, remaining absent until 8.20 A. M. the same day, when he reported sick by messenger, with having received sick on April 2, although absent from his residence when visited by Surgeon Ford and with feigning illness when visited at his residence by Police Surgeon Ford at 11.20 A. M. on April 2. Murray had explanations for all the happenings. Decision was reserved.

Policemen Hahn and Williams of the West Twentieth street station and West Thirtieth street station, charged with illegally arresting employees of the New York Herald because that paper had attacked certain detectives for collusion with thieves, appeared at 2 P. M.

Against Hahn it was charged that he "arrested without cause two citizens, F. B. Flaherty and M. J. Gallagher, near the corner of Sixteenth street and Eighth avenue and used profane language to Gallagher and in the station-house falsely charged the prisoners with disorderly conduct."

Against Williams it was charged that he struck Edward F. Dunn several times with his fist, used abusive language and resisted said Dunn when he "falsely charged him with disorderly conduct and also he arrested in the station, without cause, Henry Hogan and made a false charge of disorderly conduct."

Williams is also to be tried for being found in a saloon talking with a woman, when he should have been on post doing police duty.

Country Club of Lakewood Sells Its Property.

(Special to The Evening World.)

LAKEWOOD, N. J., April 17.—The property of the Country Club of Lakewood, which has been on the market since the recent vote to unite the two clubs of the place, has been sold.

Frederick J. Street, of New York, was the purchaser, for speculative purposes, and it is rumored that John D. Rockefeller may be the ultimate owner.

MOCK DUCK AGAIN IN COURT.

After being tried twice on the charge of killing Ah See, the juries disagreeing both times, Mock Duck was to-day called on to plead to an indictment charging him with assault on Ah See. Ah See was killed in a row Mock Duck was in, but it could not be proved that Mock Duck dealt the fatal blow. The District-Attorney will now try to prove the assault.

Lawyer Levy, for Mock Duck, obtained an adjournment until Monday.

NEW WITNESS FOUND WHO SAW THE CAB; MRS. LUIGS POSITIVELY IDENTIFIES KIERNAN.

District-Attorney Admits that if the Glennon Witness Was Murdered the Police 'Investigation' Would Hardly Have Been an Honest One.

A Friend in Need Is a Friend Indeed.
Always Stick to Your Friends, Willie.

There were startling developments in the McAuliffe murder case to-day.

District-Attorney Jerome found his first and only witness.

A detective for the Committee of Fifteen has informed him that he saw two men in plain clothes put a man into a cab outside the West Forty-seventh street police station on the Sunday morning McAuliffe was found dying.

"The World," said the District-Attorney this morning, "has done a great public service in this matter. It was most desirable that the McAuliffe mystery should be threshed out in the most infinite detail.

"Do you think, under the circumstances, the police would by any chance make an honest investigation of this McAuliffe case?" the District-Attorney was asked.

"I don't think they would," was the candid reply.

Mrs. Luigs's Record.

"How about the testimony of Mrs. Luigs, the new Word witness?

"We have looked her up," responded Mr. Jerome. "We find that she spent two terms in the Hoboken Jail, one of sixty days, the other of thirty days, for disorderly conduct; that she was arrested once besides but was not convicted; that she was convicted once to this county of breaking and entering and was tried by Judge Cowing, who suspended sentence.

"The woman tells a coherent story and gives a good excuse for being in West Forty-seventh street that morning. But there is a strange feature about all the testimony to me.

"Here is this woman with a record, one man admits he is an ex-convict, one man who comes from God knows where, who has attempted forgery and has served ten months for burglary and is a year for larceny and is a deserter from the United States Army.

"I say the peculiar thing is that all these should be directly in front of the West Forty-seventh street police station that Sunday morning at the particular moment when a man was carried out and put in a cab.

Tells a Straight Story.

The District-Attorney was asked if he had investigated the story told by the woman.

"Now, I was just going to tell you the story," he said. "She tells a straight story. I guess she will take care of herself in any police court. Mrs. Luigs was the first witness called before the grand jury. She is a German woman. She is married to a longshoreman. She is a very respectable woman. She was in her house on the night of Saturday, Feb. 15, with some friends. She left some friends in West Twenty-seventh street. She stopped with them overnight. Mrs. Luigs lives in West Fifty-fourth street. She was coming home in the morning of Sunday, Feb. 16, she walks to Eighth avenue, intending to visit her sister.

"Years ago she attended the public school in West Forty-seventh street, a few doors east of the station-house, and she formerly knew many people living on that block. She turned down Forty-seventh street to look at the old school house and to see if she could see any of her former friends. Just as she got opposite the station-house, she said, she saw two men helping a third man, who appeared to be very sick, down the steps of the station-house and across the sidewalk and lift him into the cab. She noticed that the cab was an old affair and that the driver wore a fur collarette. She remembered the incident because of the appearance of the third man, and she spoke to her husband about it later when she got home.

WOMAN TEACHER SUSPECT IN THE CLENDENIN CASE.

Capt. Walsh Orders an Expert to Examine Handwriting in Westchester Schools.

Capt. Walsh, of the Westchester police station, believes it probable that a school-teacher wrote the letters threatening to kidnap the children of the Rev. Dr. F. M. Clendenin, rector of St. Peter's Church.

Handwriting experts have been engaged to examine the writing of the school teachers in the Westchester and Throgmorton schools. The women teachers are all friendly to Principal Devlin, and one of them may have written the letters to annoy the Clendenins because they think that Mr. Clendenin was responsible for Devlin's transfer to the King street school in this city.

An effort is being made to-day to connect the writer of the letter to the Clendenins with the writer of the letter to the seventeen-year-old daughter of one of Dr. Clendenin's parishioners. The letter to the young woman asked that she meet the writer at the Fifth Avenue Hotel with a view to hearing of something to her advantage. The name of King was used.

Capt. Walsh and one of his detectives drove this afternoon to the residence of J. D. Crosby, in Unionport. Mr. Crosby is a real estate operator and editor. He has a seventeen-year-old daughter.

Capt. Walsh talked with Mrs. Crosby and the young woman. When he came out he refused to talk. Mrs. Crosby denied that her daughter had received the anonymous letter, making the appointment at the Fifth Avenue Hotel.

One of the most remarkable features of the case is the coincidence of the dream of Mrs. F. A. Belmont, who four times within three weeks saw visions of the Clendenin children being stolen by two men. Mrs. Belmont is the wife of a builder in Westchester who is a vestryman in Dr. Clendenin's church, and she is one of the closest friends of Mrs. Clendenin. She has been fond of the Clendenin children since they were babes in arms.

Mrs. Belmont's Dream.

The dream as related by Mrs. Belmont to Mrs. Clendenin after church service last Sunday is as follows:

"I could see the children as plainly as though I had been awake. They were driving along the street in your carriage, Henry, your coachman was with them, and they were laughing and chatting as happily as could be.

"Suddenly something went wrong with the harness. Henry got down to see what was the matter, and while he was trying to fix the break two men rushed up to the carriage. One of them struck Henry on the head with a stick and knocked him down. He lay unconscious in the street.

"Then they both sprang into the carriage and with the poor children screaming in their fright, the men drove off with them.

"The cries of the little ones attracted a crowd, and the people all ran after the carriage, shouting and throwing stones at it, but they could not stop the men, who escaped into the country.

"Four times now within three weeks I have had this same dream. I told my husband about it and he told me not to be foolish enough to tell you, but I worried so after dreaming it last night again that I made up my mind to tell you today."

DON'T MARRY EARLY SAYS MAGISTRATE.

BRANN DELIVERS A HOMILY WITH SENTENCE.

Tells Young Girl She Should Wed a Banker, Not Barber.

Magistrate Brann, sitting in the Essex Market Police Court, this afternoon gave his views on early marriages and also marriage in general.

The occasion was the arraignment of "Tony" Marobita, twenty-one, living at No. 101 Keep street, Brooklyn, who is desperately in love with his pretty sixteen-year-old first cousin, Josephine Marobita.

Magistrate Brann called Josephine and asked her how old she was.

"Sixteen, sir," she said.

"Only sixteen years old," said the Magistrate in surprise. "Why, you don't want to be married for some years. If you are married at sixteen you will have nothing to do but nurse babies, and your life will be drudgery. Twenty-five is a seasonable age for marriage. At thirty a woman is not so particular who she marries and at forty-five she will marry any one."

Marobita here said that if the girl did not marry him he would kill himself.

"That will be a solution to the problem," said Magistrate Brann, "but you won't do it. You fellows who say you will kill yourselves are only braggarts."

The prisoner had been in the country only twenty-two months. He is a barber by trade and has an immense head of hair. The girl was smartly dressed. In reply to a question Marobita said he had no money.

"What do you expect to get married on then," asked the Magistrate. "Why, it would take you two years to earn enough money to buy this girl a hat like the one she wears. She doesn't want to marry a barber; she ought to marry a banker."

Marobita, through the interpreter, said that he did not want to get married for two years.

"In two years, eh?" remarked Magistrate Brann. "Why a woman will change her mind several times in that period. I'll send you to Bellevue to have your sanity inquired into. If they say you are all right at Bellevue I'll have you brought back here and sent to the Island."
